DEDICATION

Kansas Entreprenurial Center brings Gov. Graves to Manhattan

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

Gov. Bill Graves was in Manhattan on Thursday to dedicate the Kansas Entrepreneurial Center.

The KEC building on Hayes Drive purchased in 1996 by the city of Manhattan, is an incubator that provides facilities and support for new technology companies. The center is part of the Mid-America Commercialization Corporation, founded jointly with several local and state agencies.

It provides job opportunities for K-State's College of Engineering students and economic opportunities for Manhattan. It was originally founded in 1988 with help from College of Engineering Dean Emeritus Don Rathbone.

The first two start-up companies to receive support from KEC are Nantek and FoodLabs. Nantek focuses on environmental development and FoodLabs researches improvements to food safety.

Before presenting the dedication plaque, Graves recognized the leadership of Rathbone, who couldn't attend the dedication, and KEC President Ron Sampson.

"I think it is worth acknowledging the great leadership that he has provided, along with Ron, that has made this very possible," Graves said.

Graves said KEC is a wonderful enterprise for Manhattan and Kansas.

"I do know, as a governor, we are always striving for anything that creates jobs and creates economic value," he said. "And in that regard, we are extremely pleased at this creative effort that accomplishes those things."

Graves said KEC has potential to do great things.

"This facility — by virtue of the jobs, the work that will be done here, the economic activity — has the potential to do some really marvelous things in terms of improving people's quality of life," he said.

Graves said he was looking forward to seeing the outcomes.

"I am truly looking forward to outstanding successes that do many great things not only for the people of our state, our nation, but also the world," he said.

Kansas Technology Enterprise Corporation president Rich Bendis said KEC serves as a model for other states, but it can't be duplicated.

"This is truly a model which will be emulated throughout the state of Kansas and across the country," he said. "But it can't be duplicated because of the people in this city and this state.

"The partnership that has come together between Manhattan and the state of Kansas is unparalleled," Bendis said.

Technology fee will not affect engineering

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

Full-time engineering students will not be affected by the $1-per-credit-hour technology fee all K-State students will pay beginning fall 1998.

The $100-per-semester engineering equipment fee has been reduced to $85 to allow for the Kansas Board of Regents-mandated increase in K-State fees. Terry King, dean of the College of Engineering, said engineering students are essentially paying the same amount of money, but it will be collected differently.

"Because the engineering students have been paying this fee, the regents decided not to add on top of that an additional fee for engineering," King said.

The state approved a technology fee of $1-per-credit hour and will match every dollar students pay with $2 from state funds.

Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president of administration and finance, said he felt it would not have been fair to assess additional fees on engineering students.

"Based on an average of 15 credit hours for an engineering major, we didn't feel like they should pay a dollar per credit hour for technology equipment when they're already paying $100, so we rolled back the engineering fee to $85 for a full-time student," Schellhardt said.

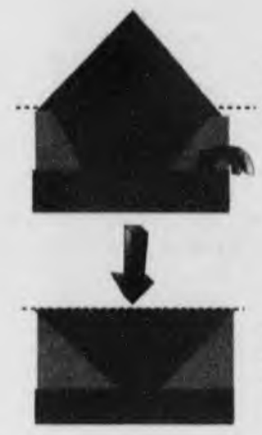
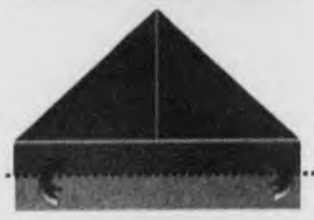
FINALLY, A PRODUCTIVE USE OF THE COLLEGIAN

How to make a printer's hat

Here is something you can make with the Collegian after you are done reading it. Plus you can really annoy your teachers.



1. Place the folded Collegian on a flat surface, open edge toward you. Then turn down upper corners to meet at the center.

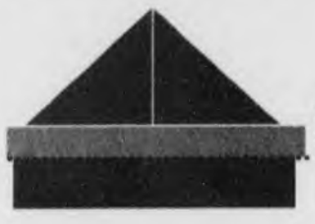


4. Now turn the whole thing over and fold the sides into the center, so the edges meet.

7. Now fold the flap down and tuck it behind the "band."

10. Now open the hat and bring the lower corners of the hat together at the center, forming a flat square.

2. Fold the lower edge of the top sheet up to the base of the triangle.



5. Fold up the corners of the lower edge, forming small triangles.

8. Turn the paper over again and fold the point down to the bottom edge.

11. Fold the closed corners toward the center, tucking them under the band.

3. Fold the top sheet over again at the base, leaving the bottom sheet unfolded.

6. Fold the lower flap up.

9. Tuck point into the band.

12. Fold the top and bottom corners to meet at the center. Your hat is now ready to be opened and worn around campus.

K-STATE'S GREATEST ROOMMATE

Columnist thankful for lack of roommate horror stories

VIEWPOINT

BRANDI HERTIG

Brandi is a junior in mass communications. You can send e-mail to Brandi at blh0377@ksu.edu.

It seems like I have heard more roommate horror stories this semester than I have in my two years here at K-State. There's the roommate whose hamster died, and she let the poor little corpse lie in the cage for a week before disposing of it.

Then there's the roommates who were angered by the third roommate's habit of actually cleaning the apartment. To show him, the roommates called him names, drew satanic symbols on the bathroom mirror and squirted the "offending" roommate with a Super Soaker every time he entered the living room.

Encounters with such morons would make the collegiate experience a hellish one for any student.

Somehow I have been blessed for the two past years with the best roommate in the whole history of roommates.

And now she's graduating.

My freshman year, Miranda and I lived in a house with another roommate named Abbi.

All of us were from Newton, Kan., all of us were editors of Newton High School's newspaper and all of us worked at the Collegian. Needless to say, anyone who came to visit us quickly realized all we talked about was the never-ending glee that was print journalism.

Abbi got married after the first semester I lived there, leaving just Miranda and me, just like in the "Little Critter" books.

I guess I should mention that anyone who tries to live with yours truly and actually survives should get a Purple Heart or something, as I am in fact the messiest and most disorganized human on the face of the earth (no, really).

Miranda is the antithesis of disorganization and general slop.

Before I lived with her, I knew Miranda only as Mandy, one of those cool kids from high school who I never thought would associate with me. In our high school newsroom, her senior picture was posted above the darkroom door with "Mandy Kennedy — She's hard core" next to it.

Even now, I still haven't really realized the fact that after this month, she won't be my roommate anymore. She gets to go to Kansas City, Mo., and become an adult, which isn't really a change for her at all.

She was probably more of an adult when she was 12 than I am now.

She pays her portion of the bills on time, then tells me, "You know, Brandi, those bills are due tomorrow," to which I always reply, "Oh, crap. I'm so sorry, I completely forgot." I'll probably get thrown into jail now that she won't be there to remind me to pay that damn KPL bill.

Her popularity doesn't stop with me, however. As beloved Collegian columnist Russell Fortmeyer put it, "The whole newsroom is obsessed with her." I'm not sure what that means (and Fortmeyer's origins are sketchy at best anyway), but she does wield this unspoken respect about the newsroom, not unlike a Viking would wield a turkey leg.

If Miranda says something is so, then that's the way it is. No one doubts her.

Opinion editor Claudette Riley says she has a "non-sexual crush" on Miranda and contends everyone else in the newsroom feels the same.

The hardest part of living with Miranda came this semester when she started to look for a job. She started early and endured a lot of rejection because employers were looking for someone to start then and there, not in May.

I never doubted she would find a job and theorized that people would be creating positions for her just so they could work with her. She wasn't of the same mind set, and it was frustrating to see her agonize over it. Worst of all, there wasn't anything I could do about it. She of course found a job, which made me a lot happier for her than I showed.

All I can say is I sure am glad I'm skipping the country next year. I think any replacement for Miranda would be a disappointment.

And she still is hard core.

Columnist hopes truth, liberty defeat liberalism

VIEWPOINT

SAM SACKETT

Sam is a junior in mass communications. You can send e-mail to Sam at sjs8645@ksu.edu.

It has and always will be my purpose to present truth in my articles. For those of you who have been brave enough to read them, I commend you. It takes intrepidness. Nothing but outright courage and arrant guts to examine issues and events in the light of truth.

My experience tells me liberals become queasy at the mentioning of truth. Trends arrive and popular opinion fades, as truth ushers liberalism into nonexistence. I admire and respect individuals who better themselves and their communities by single-handedly conquering myth and liberalism.

And you conservatives who have dared to hold firm to your beliefs, never daunting from what you always knew to be right — well done. You have loved the truth. You embrace it. And despite the liberal agenda, you are the people who contribute happiness, laughter and stability to this life.

I encourage you, who for years or maybe months (welcome aboard), have upheld freedom and liberty. Not only do you fight liberalism with creativity and uniqueness in your own life but also in the lives of those who are fortunate enough to be around you.

Don't ever lose your focus by becoming depressed by liberalism.

The people who adhere to its principles will at times try to discourage you. You will be called mean-spirited, close-minded and bigoted. Some even will endeavor to brainwash you into depending upon the government for your well-being. Do not give in. You must persevere. The American spirit will go on as truth and justice prevail.

This Fourth of July, when you're gazing into the night sky watching fireworks, remember those explosions and thundering bursts are representing YOUR freedom. Your liberty is a wonderful thing. So powerful and marvelous that some fear its ability to motivate and inspire people to greatness. They wonder why government isn't given the credit. But remember individuality and ingenuity, not government, distinguish first-rate people who use their freedom to pursue what is right.

My intentions this semester have been to present issues through a conservative Christian point of view. I have sought God's perspective because it is through his son, Jesus Christ, that I live. While I will continue striving to preserve the freedoms of this great land, I will hold more dearly to my freedom in Christ. I believe he is the answer, the only answer, to all of our questions.

I know many of you who read my articles are God-fearing people. This is commendable. You are observant to have acknowledged the truth. However, if I could have one single wish, it would be that you find fulfillment in knowing God. Not religion. Not rituals. Not doctrine. But to know God through Jesus Christ.

Once you experience his goodness, you won't want life any other way. I won't say anything more about this matter, because I believe if you are genuinely interested in knowing Jesus, you don't need me to drown you with words.

Without thankfulness, we would be all hopelessly gloomy. And so I want to thank those who have believed in me. To my family and friends — any success I have obtained has been furthered through you. I remain deeply appreciative of your unfailing support. My editor, Claudette Riley, thanks for sparking in me a deeper desire to express myself through words. (Liberals will forever hate you.) And to God be given all credit for pushing me to limits beyond expectations.

I also must give credit to the master of conservatism, Rush Limbaugh. His correctness inspires me daily. I stand amazed at the sheer brilliance this one man possesses.

This summer, continue fighting for what is right. Continue looking for good. Spending quality time with rooted individuals (men and women who are established in truth) will help renew your spiritual and mental vigor. Learn from them, especially the elderly. Listen and ask questions. Never settle for anything short of the truth.

(Oh, yeah. Do you want to brighten a liberal's day? Just tell them my face will be back on the opinion page this fall. You might want to have your camera ready. They'll make some interesting expressions.)

Until then, have an inspiring summer.

Artist's paintings connect with life's obstacles, joys

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Artists don't take on the name "Grandma" unless they achieve a certain relationship with their audience that is unexplainable in any other terms.

Kansan Elizabeth "Grandma" Layton (1909-1993) was just that sort of artist. She connected with the joys, frustrations, hopes and difficulties of contemporary Kansans in a career that began late in life in 1977. Coming out of a severe 30-year depression, the Wellsville resident turned to contour drawing as a means for coming to terms with her life.

Layton's background makes for an understandable connection with the less art-driven creative work of others who choose art therapy to overcome life's obstacles. The two are offered side-by-side in the show, "Drawing From Within," at the Manhattan Center for the Arts until May 29.

Layton is represented by a series of faint-colored drawings, "The Motherless Child," that explore the range of feelings associated with being committed to a nursing home. The series of 16, all of which are self-portraits done in Layton's characteristic skewed perspective and expressive line, reveals her initial prejudices toward nursing home life and her subsequent change of heart, ending in an almost celebratory stance. As the artist said herself, nursing homes became for her "a place where you go not to die, but to live until you die."

In the first drawing, "Leaving Home to Enter Nursing Home," a senior citizen begins to take the elderly Layton, who is seated in a wheelchair, from the comfy confines of her home with its familial elements and objects signifying lost freedoms, such as car keys. By the sixth drawing, "Beauty Salon," Layton has changed her mind significantly, extolling the small joys of getting your hair set.

Art Review

Exhibit info
"Drawing From Within," featuring work by artist Elizabeth Layton, will be at the Manhattan Center for the Arts until May 29. Admission is free.

The later numbers of drawings are pure revelry, such as "Crafts," where Layton braids bread wrappers while her real-life husband Glen slyly eyes a neighboring lady admirer. In "Birthday Party," the nursing home staff presents a smiling Layton with a cake.

Of all who knew Layton, Don Lambert, a Topeka resident and a fixture on the Kansas art scene, perhaps knew her best.

He is generally regarded as the person who brought Layton's work the attention it deserved. He also wrote the 1995 book, "The Life and Art of Elizabeth 'Grandma' Layton," lauding the artist as a true original.

"It surprised her that halfway through she changed her mind," Lambert said. "She was not anticipating coming to terms with nursing homes. She thought the entire series would be negative."

Layton never did enter a nursing home herself, but she culled subjects for her drawings from her visits with her aunt, who was in a home. The drawings are depicting a real world that nearly everyone will go or have gone through — a world that is tough to navigate for families giving responsibility for a loved one over to a stranger.

Lambert attributes the feeling of hope Layton's body of work can inspire to the artists understanding of human nature.

"It's because she touched our human side and that doesn't always happen in art," Lambert said, "She validated our feelings."

Coupled with the sometimes surprisingly good work of the art therapy patients — all of whom come from Pawnee Mental Health Services, which is sponsoring the show — the show is a strong argument for the redemptive powers of art.

Often we look at art as a window into the mind of an artist, as a representation of their emotional state. Art therapy is more concerned with the process of creating art as a way to heal one's self.

Liz Kelley, an art therapist with Pawnee, said many of the patients whose work is represented might not have picked up a pencil to draw since grade school.

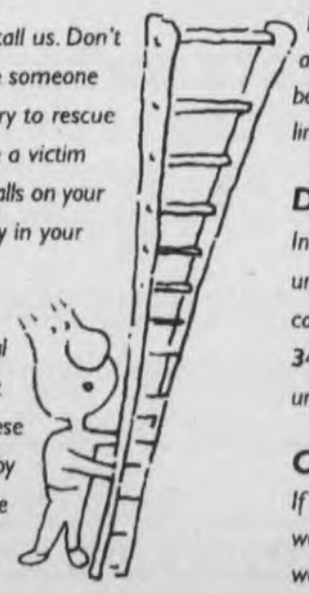
"Basically, when they come into my group I want them to feel comfortable," Kelley said.

Layton was lucky to have discovered for herself what can totally elude others for their whole lives.

That she shared it with the world reflects the concern of a truly gifted artist.

"BASICALLY, WHEN THEY COME INTO MY GROUP, I WANT THEM TO FEEL COMFORTABLE
LIZ KELLEY, ART THERAPIST

Six ways to make your life a little easier, and your home a whole lot safer.



Electrical power is safe and efficient— if you'll keep these simple suggestions in mind.

Unplugged, safely.
How you disconnect appliances from their power source is just as important as how you use them. Never yank the appliance cord to free it from the electric outlet. Never plug or unplug an appliance when your hands are wet. Always unplug before cleaning an appliance.

Don't stick around downed power lines, electrical cabinets, or transformers.
If a power line is down, call us. Don't touch the line. If you see someone touching the line, don't try to rescue them. You could become a victim yourself. If a power line falls on your car while you're in it, stay in your car and wait for help.

In some areas, transformers and electrical cabinets are mounted at or near ground level. These should be handled only by professional utility service personnel. If you notice evidence of tampering or unsecured transformers or electrical cabinets, notify us immediately.

No one, not even tree trimmers or contractors should come within ten feet of a power line. Call us, and we'll help you take care of the problem quickly and safely.

Look before you plant.
Remember, that nice little tree you plant now can grow to be a giant, and interfere with power lines. Ask your nursery about trees with mature heights of less than 25 feet. Before you plant, plan. Stay as far away from power lines as possible. And be sure to plant 10 to 15 feet from underground lines or pad mount transformers.

Dial before you dig.
In many areas KPL power lines are buried underground. Before doing any digging, simply call us toll free at 1-800 DIG SAFE (that's 344-7233). We'll be happy to help by marking underground power line locations at no charge.

Call on us to help.
If you have questions, call 1-800-794-4780 we're here with answers. If you have concerns, we'll help get them taken care of. After all, we're here to serve you*. We're KPL. We're dedicated to making your life a little easier, and your home a safe place.*

Not even with a 10-foot pole!
Keep tools, ladders, kites, TV antennas and tree branches away from power lines. If a branch or any object comes in contact with a power line DON'T ATTEMPT TO REMOVE IT!

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
6 FRIDAY, MAY 8, 1998 SPORTS EDITOR: SAM FELSENFELD sports@spub.ksu.edu

SPORTS ROUNDUP

Sports Roundup is your daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports. Compiled from Associated Press and Collegian staff reports.

Dorodnova makes 2 brackets in NCAA tennis tournament

One day after the K-State tennis team was chosen to participate in the 1998 NCAA Central Regional, senior Yana Dorodnova received an at-large bid to play in the NCAA Championships May 25-27 at the University of Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind.

It is the first time a Wildcat player has been selected to participate in both the singles and the team competition. In addition, it is just the second time K-State has had an individual chosen to compete in the singles tournament.

Ranked 47th by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association, Dorodnova posted a stellar 15-5 record at No. 1 singles during the spring session and a 25-10 mark during the 1997-1998 campaign. She recorded three top-30 wins this year, including a straight-set victory over 10th-ranked Holly Parkinson of Brigham Young on March 9

She was named Big 12 Player-of-the-Week on March 16, and later garnered first-team All-Big 12 honors at singles and doubles for the second consecutive year. She also earned the Big 12 No. 1 singles championship by posting the best record in the conference at that flight.

Dorodnova was one of a record nine individuals (and two alternates) from the Central Region picked to play in the NCAA Championships. That total is more than twice the previous regional best of four players, and it gives the Central Region the second-most players in this year's field, trailing only the Southeast Region (13).

"Yana has played very well for us this year, and I think that has contributed to our region being as strong as it has been," K-State head coach Steve Bietau said. "She has worked hard to improve her game, and this is a fitting reward for her efforts."

The pairings for the NCAA singles competition will be announced on May 24 with play scheduled to begin the next day. K-State (11-11) begins NCAA regional play at 10 a.m. May 14 against No. 25 New Mexico.

Big 12 commisioner resigns; replacement still in question

DALLAS — Big 12 Commissioner Steve Hatchell, who helped form the league in 1995, resigned on Thursday, saying both he and the conference need a change.

Hatchell, who last month said he planned to have another job by this summer, will leave effective immediately.

"It's time for a change for the conference and me," Hatchell said in a news release faxed to news agencies Thursday evening.

"Together we have taken this conference from an idea to a reality. ... That process has been difficult and exhaustive at times. But I really believe the Big 12 today stands for excellence and integrity."

A Big 12 spokesman said Hatchell was unavailable for further comment.

Sources told The Associated Press last month that Hatchell was leaving under pressure.

But both Dr. Ray Bowen, president of Texas A&M and chairman of the conference, and Hatchell, denied the move was being forced.

Bowen said Oklahoma State associate athletic director Dave Martin, recently hired by the Big 12 as chief operating officer, will replace Hatchell as interim commissioner.

"Steve Hatchell has done a remarkable job positioning the Big 12 for greatness," Bowen said. "The foundation has been laid. Now we must build the future."

Hatchell recently interviewed for a top position with the Salt Lake Organizing Committee, which will oversee the Winter Olympics in 2002. But Hatchell did not get that job.

In his release, Hatchell did not mention other job possibilities. The statement said only that he will explore a number of opportunities which can utilize his specific skills.

Sources have said Hatchell's problems stemmed from his treatment of staff members at Big 12 headquarters in Dallas.

"It has to do with treating people with respect," a source within the Big 12 told AP. "You have to treat everybody, high and low, male and female, with respect. Within the staff, maybe that's not happened."

Among the names mentioned as possible replacements if Hatchell leaves are Joe Castiglione, athletic directors at Missouri, and Bob Frederick, athletics director at Kansas. Frederick finished runnerup to Hatchell when the Big 12 presidents met in March 1995 to select the new league's first commissioner.

Hatchell, a former commissioner of the Southwest Conference and executive director of the Orange Bowl, said in a recent interview he was getting weary of the constant pressures of the job.

The Big 12 was formed when the Big Eight Conference linked up with Texas, Texas Tech, Texas A&M and Baylor of the Southwest Conference in 1995.

Hatchell, who also had been an assistant commissioner of the Big Eight and was then the SWC commissioner, seemed like a natural for the job.

Although it has not been as successful in NCAA basketball and football bowl competition as expected, the Big 12 has been a great financial success.

Cephus Scott.

The free safety, a former Wildcat as of April 25, was nothing short of amazing as a football and basketball player in high school.

Scott, a product of Ball High School in Galveston, Texas, was rated the No. 2 defensive back in the state and No. 4 in the nation as a senior.

In March 1995, Schutt Sports Group rated the top high school players in the country and listed Scott in the same company as Charles Woodson, Ahman Green, Randy Moss, Dan Kendra, Daunte Culpepper, Brock Huard, Kevin Faulk, Amos Zeroue, D'Andre Hardeman and Rob Konrad.

On the basketball court, Scott sustained a pinched nerve in his left rotator cuff that allowed him only 5-percent movement of his shoulder and rendered his left arm virtually useless. However, he still managed to lead his league in rebounding, despite being only 6 feet 2 inches tall.

So, when he talks about leaving the K-State football team because of a lack of playing time and not fitting into the system, it's only natural he chooses to combine the two sports.

"Last year, I felt like Kobe Bryant," he said. "I feel I should have been on the field. He's an all-star, but there's someone starting ahead of him. That's how I felt."

Now that he's out of the system, he compares himself wuth another NBA player, Ike Austin. Austin served as Alonzo Mourning's backup at center for the Miami Heat and played a considerable amount when Mourning was down with an injury this season.

But when Mourning returned, the Heat traded Austin to the Clippers and eventually were upset in the first round of the playoffs.

Scott played last season, but most of his snaps came when K-State free safety Lamar Chapman couldn't play during the middle of the season because of a hyperextended elbow. When Chapman came back, Scott only saw action in dime situations.

"I saw Ike Austin talking about everything on TV the other day. The way he said it was that he feels like they used him. But then in the playoffs, guess what? Alonzo Mourning gets suspended. So where's Ike Austin at? They need him. But he's with the Clippers."

In fairness, Scott refuses to say he's better than Chapman.

"I have nothing against Chap," Scott said. "He's a good friend of mine and he's a great player."

Scott said he just wanted his chance.

He said that entering spring ball he was listed, along with Chapman, as the No. 1 free safety. No No. 2 was listed, and walk-on Luke Butler was the three. However, he said he didn't play with the ones at all, except during dime.

He's said he's not bitter, but he realizes he didn't see eye-to-eye with defensive coordinator Mike Stoops, and he wasn't going to see too much of the field this season. Leaving K-State, one of the top-0 programs in the nation, was a difficult decision, so Scott consulted with his mother, Graddy Scott, his No. 1 adviser.

"My thing was, whatever would make him happy, I would stand behind him 100 percent. I believe Cephus makes good decisions. Whatever he does, I support him," Graddy Scott said.

"I told him to do whatever would make him the happiest. I told him to search his heart, to lay everything on the table, to weigh all the pros and cons and to make his decision."

That decision, to leave K-State, came after the third week of spring practice. Cephus Scott told K-State coach Bill Snyder on April 25, seven days before the spring game.

"He kind of knew it was coming," Cephus Scott said.

It wasn't certain he was leaving that day, but he was pretty sure.

"I told them, 'If I don't show up to practice on Monday, you know I quit,'" Scott said. He never went back.

"I knew it was coming," Graddy Scott said. "I just didn't know when. It's like when a hurricane is brewing, and you get prepared, but you don't know when it's coming in."

So where does Cephus Scott, a gifted athlete with plenty of potential, go from Manhattan?

"He'll probably have to settle for a Division I-AA school. Under NCAA rules, he would have to sit out for a year if he transferred to another Division I-A school. The schools he's looking at are Southwest Missouri State, Stephen F. Austin, Texas A&M-Kingsville and a school in Illinois, which probably doesn't stand much of a chance because Scott can't remember its name.

He said he's not worried about playing for a smaller school with less exposure. He just

Columnist celebrates last 'Seinfeld' episode by writing about nothing

What is K-State to do?

As the whole world knows, Thursday night is the finale of the classic sitcom "Seinfeld." The news will be even harder to take at K-State, where the entire campus doubtlessly still will be mourning the loss of its Friday sports columnist, going on to more important and more boring things, also known as senior projects.

VIEWPOINT

DAN MERKER

Dan is a senior in computer science. You can send e-mail to Dan at dmerker@ksu.edu.

The fields of computer science and sports journalism simply weren't meant to get along. Virgil Wallentine, the head of the Department of Computer Science, and Todd Simon, the director of the A.Q. School of Journalism and Mass Communications, arm-wrestled for my services. Wallentine won, and it's a good thing for me because it would have been real tough to graduate without all my required classes.

Without too much to say, here is my tribute to the finest show on television, "Seinfeld." I leave the Collegian with a column about nothing in particular.

— I've heard the questions, and I'm here to verify it once and for all. It was somewhat obvious by my previous mugshots. My real name is Opie Taylor, and I'm only 8 years old. I have been posing as a college student all year on a mission to entertain and educate K-State about sports and piss off an entire state. Mission accomplished.

— People have been asking about K-State's football players. Can Michael Bishop win the Heisman Trophy? Can the Wildcats finally beat (eight-letter word omitted because my mom won't let me say bad words) and win the Big 12? Maybe even the national championship? It's possible, but by no means a foregone conclusion

Are the men in purple real humans? They're real, and they're spectacular.

— Does anyone see a correlation between Pero Vasiljevic and Babu? I hear his last words in the United States, however, were a quote Newman proclaimed in the Kenny Rogers Roasters' episode.

"Vile weed!!"

— The best sports-related "Seinfeld" moment was when George Steinbrenner went to George's parents' house to tell them he thought George was dead, to which Frank Costanza responded, "What in the hell did you trade Jay Buhner for?!?"

Steinbrenner's response? "Ken Phelps. My people told me Ken Phelps."

— I've been told that when I celebrate a good shot bowling, I look like Elaine dancing. I've since quit bowling.

— Jim Leyland's career took a turn for the better right after he took Jerry's lead and proclaimed, "I don't wanna be a pirate." The next year, he won the World Series.

— My condolences to whoever ends up behind K-State's own version of Kramer at sporting events. I ended up behind him at the first two football games and spent more time bobbing and weaving than Sugar Ray Leonard.

— If Topeka's new hockey team outdraws the Kansas City Blades next year, Kansas City should lose all its sports franchises.

By the way, what kind of name is the Scarecrows anyway?

— I still feel like proclaiming, "Summer of George" every time I play Frisbee golf on campus.

— I can't wait until Colbert Hills opens. We really need this. Same for a new baseball stadium. It's a wonder K-State has won 20 games without first-class facilities. If you build it, they will come. Right Coach Snyder?

— Has anyone noticed that better players are quitting K-State's football team now than it ever had 10 years ago?

— I'll leave with a final, obvious statement. K-State's new priorities for alumni seating sucks. It is ludicrous for lifer fans to give up their seats to the highest-bidding bandwagon K-State football fan. Season tickets shouldn't be auctioned.

Take care.

Cats to finish play against Texas Tech

▸No. 22 Texas Tech will be host to K-State for final season series.

JK
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State baseball team will finish out its 1998 season this weekend with a three-game set against No. 22 Texas Tech at Dan Law Field in Lubbock, Texas.

The Wildcats (20-29) are coming off of two straight losses to No. 5 Wichita State. Wednesday night, K-State once again had to battle back from a big deficit. The Shockers put up seven runs in the second inning off starting pitcher Chad Cosens and relief pitcher Tom Henshaw to cruise to an easy 13-7 victory.

The closest the Cats got was within three runs as they tallied a 4-spot in the top of the fifth, highlighted by two-run singles from first baseman Yancy Ayres and right fielder Quinn Cravens, to get within 7-4. However, the Shockers answered with a run in their half of the inning and added three more tallies in the sixth to seal the win.

Again K-State's defense accounted for four unearned runs off of two errors. However, K-State head coach Mike Clark said his squad played much more competitively Wednesday night.

"We were actually in a position to score more than we did, but we hit into some tough luck," Clark said. "We hit some hard ground balls at people."

Ayres had three hits, two RBIs and a stole base. Designated hitter Kasey Weishaar, shortstop Josh Cavender and Cravens also posted multihit games. For Cavender, it was the first multihit performance of his collegiate career. Third baseman Josh Marn extended his hitting streak to nine games with an RBI single in the eighth inning.

Meanwhile, Texas Tech (36-17) hasn't played a game since April 27 when it beat the College of the Southwest 14-7. Tech, last year's Big 12 regular-season champions, has clinched a spot in the conference tournament by posting a 15-11 record in league play.

"I know what we need to do to win," Clark said. "It's going to be a battle and if it takes them a day to get back in tune then hopefully we can take advantage of it."

Tech has arguably the best starting rotation in the Big 12 in Shane Wright, Monty Ward and Jesse Cornejo.

Wright was the first Big 12 pitcher to win 10 games, leads the conference with 125.2 innings pitched and only has walked 16 batters all season. Wright (11-1) has pitched five consecutive complete games and has won four of them. Furthermore, Wright has pitched 10 complete games on the year.

"They have probably some of the best starters in the conference by far," Clark said. "Those three are real solid."

Wright is slated to take the mound on today, Ward on Saturday and Cornejo to close out the season most likely against K-State left-hander Brandon Peck.

Clark said he was elated about the year thus far.

"Hopefully this will be a positive way to finish off the season," Clark said. "It will give our seniors an opportunity to go out and have a good series to remember."

Marn, a senior in his final campaign with K-State, reiterated Clark's sentiments.

"We just want to finish strong and end on a good year," he said. "I think one of the goals you should always have is you should end the year on a hit so you never know when your last at-bat is going to come."

Tongihts's game gets under way at 7 p.m. Saturday and Sunday's first pitch is slated for 2 p.m.

wants to play — and he'd love to play beyond his two years of remaining eligibility.

"I'll put it like this — they'll see me for the draft," Scott said.

While he hasn't signed anywhere yet, he gives the impression that Texas A&M-Kingsville is leading the race so far, due to three females: Angela Scott, his 2-year-old daughter; Tamisha Tottenham, his fiancé; and Graddy Scott. His daughter, by all indications, is his primary concern.

"I've been away from my family for two and a half years. I've been away from my child for two years," Cephus Scott said. "I haven't been able to watch my daughter blossom. I haven't seen my sisters and my mother. With only 25 days off out of 365, it takes a toll on you."

He's well aware that while he'd busy with school and football if he went back to Texas, Kingsville is only 300 miles from Galveston and he'll be able to spend more time getting to know Angela.

"People say that playing football is like a job," he said. "But it's not. A job pays you. With that, you can take care of your little girl, and you can buy her shoes, you can buy her clothes, you can buy her Pampers, you can buy her anything she wants. But your scholarship only pays for you. If I go to Texas A&M-Kingsville, she'll be with me so she'll become me."

Tottenham probably will follow Scott wherever he signs. She moved up to Manhattan from Texas this semester and has attended classes at K-State. Scott said he was disenchanted with the program last season, and figured that if Tottenham lived with him, he'd forget about his problems on the field when he got home.

"I thought when she came up, it would give me something to be happy about," he said. "But even her being up here didn't make me happy."

Cephus Scott still is working out, and will leave town once finals are over. He's singing in a friend's wedding on May 16 in Texas. He'll come back to get his possessions, but he said he doesn't think he'll ever come back to the Little Apple. He said he'll keep in touch with his friends on the team, mainly Chapman, linebacker Jeff Kelly and defensive back Keith Black.

Even though he's left the team, he hasn't caught any flack from his former teammates.

"Out of all of them that I've talked to, not one of them has told me I was doing the wrong thing," he said.

He said he'll pull for the team next season, when they're expected to challenge Nebraska for the Big 12 Conference title. Cephus Scott said the Cats will take the game Nov. 14 if they go out and play like they're capable of playing.

"When they beat Nebraska this year, I'll be the first one to call and congratulate them," he said.

He also said he'll pull for Stoops to succeed, even though they didn't get along and their personality conflict was one of the main reasons Cephus Scott cited for leaving the team.

"I want to talk to him before I go," Scott said.

"I want to make my peace before I leave."

While Scott said he'll miss his teammates a great deal, he said he'll miss Cat fans the most. Cephus Scott became a fan favorite last season when he developed into a big hitter in the secondary.

"That's what hurt me the most, because the fans supported me here," Scott said. "I received a letter from a fan who let me know she named her child after me, and I got another letter that told me they were gonna have a fan section for me in the stadium. I called those people up and said thank you. I told them I appreciated it."

Sprinter needs to regain rhythm after month of football

JOEL WHITE
Kansas State Collegian

Raw, unadulterated speed for 200 meters.

That is the one way to describe what will happen as K-State sprinter Keith Black bursts from the starting blocks in the 200-meter dash at Saturday's K-State-Nebraska track meet.

K-State coach Cliff Rovelto chooses a different way to describe the way Black will perform.

"Rusty, I guess is the word," Rovelto said. "He just hasn't raced and hasn't practiced, so he's not very sharp."

Black has reason to be rusty. He has been playing spring football for the Wildcats over the last month. Instead of running sustained 200- to 400-meter sprints, Black has been backpedaling and using short speed bursts from the short-side cornerback position.

Although Black is conditioned, Rovelto said it is the wrong type of conditioning for track.

"It's a different kind of conditioning," Rovelto said. "You can be in great shape for one, and it's not appropriate for the other."

Rovelto said the one thing that Black has lost is his rhythm. With only two weeks left to qualify for the NCAA Championships in any event, Rovelto said Black's time might have already run out.

"When you're running long sprints, rhythm is important, and it takes a while to get in it," Rovelto said. "He doesn't have enough time to get back into rhythm."

In shape and in rhythm, Black is one of the fastest 400-meter runners in the nation. He placed fifth in the 400 at last year's NCAA Championships. His personal record of 45.42 seconds came in a second-place effort in last year's Big 12 Championships.

"He is four to six weeks away from getting back into what he is capable of doing," Rovelto said. "Anything that he runs over the next three to four weeks might be fast, but it won't be all of what he's capable."

Black will compete in the 200, 400- and 1,600-meter relays in the dual meet this Saturday at the R.V. Christian Track.

Another K-State track athlete who has been out of commission in the past couple of weeks is middle-distance runner Emily Diederich.

Diederich, who has been fighting bouts with her asthma, ran a 2:33.6 in the 800 at last week's Texas Invitational. Her outdoor personal record is 2:08.65.

"Usually we can control it pretty well, but something has changed," Diederich said. "I don't know if its the weather or if it's the allergy season or something else that's doing it."

Diederich said she uses an inhaler a few hours before her race, but the asthma strikes during the middle of the race.

"I can get to the first lap OK, then after that, there's nothing much I can do," Diederich said.

Diederich finished her first lap in 61 seconds, but her second lap took 92 seconds — the pace for a 10,000-meter race. She will test herself again this week in the 800 and 1,600-meter relay.

The KSU-NU dual, which was originally scheduled for today, was moved to Saturday because Nebraska is in finals week.

The field events start at 1:45 p.m. and the running events start at 3 p.m.

NCAA to appeal $67 million judgment awarded to coaches

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. — Claiming its case was not given a fair hearing before U.S. District Court Judge Kathryn Vratil, the NCAA said Thursday it will appeal the $67 million judgment awarded to assistant coaches whose salaries it restricted unlawfully.

The roughly 1,900 coaches involved in the class-action suit were awarded $22.3 million in damages by a federal jury in Kansas City, Kan., on Monday after three weeks of testimony.

Under antitrust law, the damages are tripled. The huge award has triggered widespread resentment among NCAA schools not only at the jury but at the NCAA's management of the case. If allowed to stand, the penalty would cause financial pain to many schools, which would be required ultimately to foot the bill.

The NCAA said Vratil made a number of errors that could result in a successful appeal at the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

"The court did not permit us to present evidence that would have explained to the jury the underlying rationale for the restricted-earnings legislation," said Samuel Smith, chairman of the NCAA Executive Committee and president of Washington State.

"Without that information, the jury could not properly understand the context within which it was asked to assess damages."

The restricted-earnings rule was adopted as part of a cost-saving package of legislation that eliminated many coaching positions in 1991. It took effect in 1992, and three groups of coaches filed suit after the NCAA rebuffed their pleas to have the rule lifted.

Their suits later were combined into a class-action lawsuit representing all restricted-earnings coaches at Division I schools. The court ruled in 1995 that the NCAA was in violation of antitrust law. The 10th U.S. Circuit Court later upheld that judgment.

"The irony is that the restricted earnings position was adopted in place of legislation that would have eliminated a coaching position altogether," Smith said. "In fact, the cap was established to assure that these positions would be filled by new coaches entering the field rather than veteran coaches."

Dennis Cross, a lawyer for the coaches, disputed Smith's claim that the rule was meant to add a coaching position.

"This idea that they added a coaching position is nonsense," Cross told The Associated Press. "The fact is there were five allowed coaching positions in men's basketball prior to the enactment of the rule. After enactment of the rule, there were only four. To call that adding a position is not the kind of arithmetic I learned in school."

Cross also took issue with the NCAA's contention that it was not allowed to explain to the jury that the restricted earnings slot created an entry-level position.

"You look over the trial record and the term 'entry-level' is everywhere," Cross said. "They talked about practically nothing else. They can't say they didn't get a chance to tell their story, because they did."

Vratil issued summary judgment against the NCAA in May 1995. The NCAA's appeal to the 10th Circuit was rejected, and the case was sent back to Kansas City for the penalty phase.

The NCAA, which already faces legal bills in excess of an estimated $10 million, also might appeal the original decision to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"What this means is they're willing to spend millions more on attorney fees to stop from paying their coaches what they took from them years ago," Cross said.

Organizations fight low retention rates

▶ PROGRAMS ESTABLISH METHODS TO INCREASE RETURNING STUDENTS.

BARBARA HOLLINGSWORTH
Kansas State Collegian

Culture shock.

That's how Colette McLemore, Black Student Union president and senior in social science, described her transition from her home in St. Louis to Manhattan.

But culture shock is just one reason administrators said seeing multicultural students through to graduation is a challenge.

Retention rates for white students were 77 percent in 1995 while 58 percent of black students returned for a second year of college. Sixty-four percent of Hispanic students, 75 percent of Asian students and 59 percents of American Indian students returned.

Retention might be low, but things are being done to increase it.

Multicultural organizations play a role in combating low retention rates, McLemore said. Being involved in BSU helped keep her at K-State.

"You come here, and you see that a lot of the leaders are white," she said. "Sometimes you want to get involved in things, and sometimes you want to stay in a comfort zone."

Multicultural student organizations also provide opportunities for social interaction and community service, said Carlos Contreras, sophomore in business administration and Hispanic American Leadership Organization and Sigma Lambda Beta fraternity member.

"Seeing where you are now, you have to reach back to help someone else," he said.

In addition to multicultural groups showing support for the community, Contreras said the groups support each other. HALO members will attend events put on by BSU, Asian American Students for Intercultural Awareness and the Native American Student Body.

"We always try to show support for each other because a lot of time we get left out of things," Contreras said.

Colleges and academic departments also have programs to help diversify the university. The College of Engineering has a more than 20-year-old program that helps recruit and retain multicultural students.

Thirkelle Howard, director of the program, said it offers free tutoring, academic advice and help finding jobs and internships.

The program is open 24-hours a day seven days of week in Seaton Hall. It provides academic tutors and offers scholarships for all students with a 3.0 grade point average or above.

Reginland McGowan, chairman of the multicultural student enrollment and retention council for the President's Commission on Multicultural Affairs, said the engineering department's program should serve as a model for other colleges and departments.

"(College of Engineering Dean Emeritus) Don Rathbone is also known for starting the minority engineering program, which has been very successful to the point where we're recommending to other colleges that they form a similar program," McGowan said.

"We've had somewhat of a positive response from these colleges, but I can tell you that today, as we speak, it hasn't been done."

Howard said she would like to see similar program campus wide. Until that time, she said students from other colleges could take advantage of some the program's benefits.

McGowan said it often takes students time to fully realize the importance of diversity.

"While you're here, you get in your comfort zone, but when you graduate, you go to work and have to interact within your community," he said.

To improve retention and recruitment of multicultural students, McGowan said diversity should be valued and not forgotten.

"One thing about this issue is you can't set it on the back burner," he said. "You have to keep it talked about. If you don't, it will comfortably go away."

Public library makes effort, but misses details

COMMENTARY BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

It's hard to remember the last time a new public building in Manhattan included an outdoor space in which one actually wanted to linger.

With the recent completion of the $3.7 million, 31,000 square foot expansion and renovation of the Manhattan Public Library, at the corner of Juliette and Poyntz, architect Brent Bowman has accomplished this twice.

First, with a new entrance along Poyntz Avenue that features a linear water pool that's an agreeable place to sit and watch traffic glide past or get your hands wet. (Maybe it could use the addition of a sculpture garden on the lawn.) And second, in an unexpected grove of trees, between the back parking lot and new addition, which one can imagine will eventually become a great place for a sit or a stroll.

His addition adds to, not detracts from, the success of the original 1968 library designed by architect William R. Eidson. Bowman worked for Eidson in the 1970s when he attended K-State.

The basic concept of the addition is a Modernist box placed east of the existing building. Three stories high, the addition connects to the old library by way of an atrium. The new addition houses the children's library, a library for physically impaired individuals, administrative offices, a meeting room and various library offices. Concrete, limestone and glass are retained from the existing building as the main materials in the addition.

The strict geometries of Bowman's addition continue Eidson's original design. The building now seems to step up in scale from west to east. The one aspect of the new addition that seems a bit questionable is its scale — it now overshadows the nearby St. Paul's Episcopal Church and offers a blank wall as conciliation.

A comparison of exterior massing and structural treatments suggest comparison with K-State's King Hall, a rather ordinary college building. The architectural approach of the articulated beams and columns on the various elevations of King is imitated in the expansion. What sets the building apart, however, is a glass slice down the middle creating the atrium.

It can be said with some degree of certainty that the library's central atrium is the best example of said building feature in town.

This three-level atrium of concrete walkways and steel railing crowned by a skylight is a study in contrasts — wood and concrete, light and dark, massive and airy. It's a central core that connects the new addition to the existing library and the front of the block with the parking in back.

In an overall glance, the space is welcoming, pleasant and functional. However, the details of architecture and construction are not always in harmony.

For example, the steel rail is a conventional choice, but dressed up with interesting connections. However, where the rail connects with the concrete walkways, the location of which is denoted with a vertical groove in the concrete, the two materials fail to meet symmetrically. Looking at all of the connections. It's the rare rail connection that actually meets the concrete groove head-on. Perhaps that's asking too much, but "God is in the details," as the great architect Mies Van der Rohe said.

There are other points in need of fine-tuning, like the uninteresting north entry off the linear pool that has no sense of arrival or purpose. It's got the panache of a side door.

The public library has never necessarily been a great building and perhaps that owes as much to the budgets it's been given than to architectural gusto. Bowman certainly knows how to make a small budget sing. But the library lacks that extra polish and attention that truly great buildings possess.

Not that this deficit of details makes the library any less important. Already, the newly renovated library has reclaimed its audience and has found fans for its many new spaces. Built public space of this quality in Manhattan is too precious to ignore.

Happy Mother's Day!

Director sees art center as economic catalyst

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

After four years inside the Beltway, Galen Wixon wanted to find a quiet place he could move his family and still maintain his involvement with the arts.

Leaving Reston, Va. in suburban Washington D.C., for a home in Wamego may be quite an adjustment, but Wixon has instantly become one of the busiest and newest voices in the arts community as director of the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

"The arts in Kansas are important to me, and I saw this as an opportunity to help," Wixon said. "And, frankly, I just wanted to get back to Kansas."

With a 7-month-old daughter, Wixon has almost two full-time jobs. His Washington, D.C., job was as executive director of the American String Teacher's Association. A classically trained cellist, he has played with the Wichita Symphony and in other groups in Washington. He has a master's degree in music performance from Wichita State University, and a master's degree in arts management from Carnegie-Mellon University.

"The arts may be even more accessible here," he said. "In Washington you have to drive and park and it costs a fortune."

Wixon has proclaimed fund-raising as his main priority as he settles into a job overseeing the diverse programming of a center that offers theater, art classes, gallery exhibitions, concerts and readings.

"I think what has to happen with these communities, with arts centers like ourselves, is they need to develop ties to the business community," he said. "We need to integrate into the Chamber of Commerce. We need to see this arts center as an economic tool — that's where we will get our viability."

In a year when the National Endowment for the Arts released a report criticizing arts institutions for being out of touch with their communities, Manhattan's arts center has struggled through three directors.

Terrie McCants, who had joined the arts center as director in September 1996, resigned in September 1997. Before her resignation, many long-time staff members had left the center.

In McCants' place, Chris Heavey was appointed interim director until January 1998. Karen Lauseng, who had been handling publicity, took over as interim director until Wixon was hired in February.

Needless to say, the arts center is in a transitional period.

"I want to examine what is here now and develop a mix of programming that will appeal to the city and the region," Wixon said. "We have a niche, but I don't think that's been fully developed. I'm not a programming person. I'm a person who comes in here to manage and fundraise."

The arts center offers a number of challenges to the new director including making decisions concerning the further improvement of its 1520 Poyntz Ave., facility, getting the community and K-State students interested in its programming, building links with other local arts organizations and recruiting staff members. Those are long-term projects Wixon has committed himself to addressing.

"The key word is community," Wixon said. "The arts center is there for the community to participate in. I don't think a lot of other arts centers can say that."

DIGGIN' DIRT

▶ GARDENS PROVIDE CENTRAL SPOT FOR MANHATTAN-AREA GROWERS

AMY MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan might have a large number of people living in apartments with no property to call their own, but those people can still do a little digging in the dirt at Manhattan Community Gardens.

Kirk Hargett, board member for the gardens, said he began gardening there because he lived in an apartment. Now, five years later, his garden remains constant, even when he has moved.

"If I change apartments, I always have my plot there," Hargett said.

David Schoneweis, president of Manhattan Community Gardens, said the golden rule applies for the gardeners using the plots.

"We want it to be a fun experience for people, and not have a lot of rules," Schoneweis said.

But with more than 140 plots, each measuring about 20 feet wide by 20 feet long, the gardens do have some rules to help everything run smoothly.

"Mainly just do a good job in your own plot, and don't let yours wander into other plots," Schoneweis said. "And if you're in the organic area, don't use chemical pesticides."

He said gardeners are also required to sign up every spring for a two-week period when they are responsible for mowing the common areas. At the end of the year, they must clean up their plots to avoid losing their deposits.

First-time members of the community gardens are limited to one plot, but returning gardeners can rent up to four.

"We want people to have a good experience and not get totally overwhelmed," Schoneweis said. "When the weeds grow faster than the vegetables, they can get totally intimidated."

Melvin Starnes, who has been at the community gardens since 1974, said he doesn't like some of the changes made over the past 24 years, but he still likes gardening.

"The plots are going up, and they change the rules too much," Starnes said.

He gardens about every day because he likes to keep moving and to keep his plot looking presentable, he said.

Schoneweis said Starnes, one of the original members of the community gardens, is known for keeping his area clean.

"A weed doesn't dare show its head in his garden," he said.

Jennifer Franklin said she rents a plot and checks it every day.

"I go out there every day to check on things, even yesterday when it was raining," she said. "It's like an escape."

Franklin, who is head baker at Java Espresso & Bakery, uses some of the herbs and flowers she grows at the gardens as ingredients and garnishes for her pastries. She said because her job is so public-oriented, she likes getting away to work in the garden in her free time.

"I like all of it, digging it up, hoeing, planning it out," she said. "Nobody asks me to do anything."

Franklin, who has an organic plot, said she tries to eat organic produce because she has been on chemotherapy, which makes it difficult for her to eat foods with pesticides.

"I can tell when a food has pesticides," she said. "It's just easier to grow my own food."

Schoneweis said about a half-dozen garden plots are still available. Anyone interested should call UFM at 539-8763 for more information. The cost varies, based on the person's income, but everyone pays a $10 deposit, which is refundable at the end of the season. All gardeners have access to tools such as rakes, hoes and shovels, and sometimes gardening centers donate seeds or older plants that they can't sell.

Pee Shy makes Springfest appearance as part of tour

▶ SINGER'S BOYFRIEND COINS NAME FOR SELF-DESCRIBED 'WEIRD, ECLECTIC GROUP'

TODD PACEY
Kansas State Collegian

"I thought I had missed the boat because my mom didn't sign me up for piano lessons when I was seven," Cindy Wheeler said.

Wheeler was wrong. Wheeler is a singer, lyricist, guitarist and accordion player for the band Pee Shy. Wheeler's music career began in college when she played for a band that she said did not really go anywhere. It was not until Wheeler was 28 years old when she borrowed an accordion from a friend and formed a musical duet with her new friend Jenny Juristo.

Juristo was the host of a local radio show in Florida called "After the Polka," and Wheeler was the owner of Three Birds bookstore, as well as a national poetry slam champ.

Wheeler said she had listened to Juristo's show and Juristo had shopped in her store, but the two did not know each other and finally met at a poetry reading.

"She invited me to come on her show, and I did everything from guest dee jaying to poetry reading. After we began to get to know each other, I found out she had training in classical clarinet when she was younger, so we then formed a musical duet," Wheeler said.

In 1996, the two along with bassist Mary Guidera and a drummer named Bill released their first album, "Who Let the Monkeys Out?" The name of the band was Pee Shy.

"The name is actually what is sounds like. I am not this way anymore, but a lot of girls are very shy of peeing when other people are around. They try to make as much distraction noise as possible. My boyfriend would always say 'Baby, you pee shy,'" Wheeler said.

Two years later, Pee Shy has released its second album, this time on Mercury records, called "Don't Get Too Comfortable." The first single is also the first track on the album "Mr. Whisper." Wheeler said they decided to release "Mr. Whisper" first because they had been playing the song live ever since their first album came out.

People were coming up to them after the concerts asking where the could find the song, Wheeler said.

"We're a wacky pop band. It's a weird eclectic group because the instrumentation is so varied. The lyrics are like a traditional pop song, but the music gives it an edge," Wheeler said.

Pee Shy is in the middle of a 16-day tour and will be hitting the road again in July. Wheeler said they are working on new songs in between touring, but there are no real plans for a video for "Mr. Whisper." Wheeler said they have a concept in mind, but shooting a video is a real crapshoot.

Pee Shy will be performing this Saturday at Springfest '98 in Memorial Stadium along with headliner Tone Loc. Wheeler said Pee Shy has played shows similar to this, even playing on the same stage as the Village People.

Purple Masque performance addresses students' transition

DIANA LEE
Kansas State Collegian

"Faces in the Crowd," an original student work, will play in the Purple Masque Theatre at 8 tonight and in the Nichols Theatre at 8 p.m. Saturday. The play examines the issues students face as they make the transition from high school to college.

Christy Scott, a doctoral candidate in psychology, formed the group of actors who formed the play called The Maverick Company. Scott is also directing the play.

▶ Show info
"Faces in the Crowd" will show at 8 p.m. today in the Purple Masque Theater and at 8 p.m. Saturday in Nichols Theater.

"The play is really a combination of psychology and theater, often called social issues theater. It includes five women who share their stories and discuss issues of relevance to their transition into college," Scott said.

"Faces in the Crowd" is being sponsored by the theater department, and Norman Fedder is the faculty sponsor.

"I chose to be involved in it because I'm very much interested in drama that relates to social and personal problems," Fedder said.

Scott designed the program so undergraduates had an opportunity to participate in theater outside of the normal outlets and give them the chance to do be a part of something not normally available on campus.

"I wanted them to be able to tell a story and at the same time tell their own stories. I wanted them to learn to be comfortable with who they are and tell how they've changed," she said.

Scott also believes it is an opportunity for the students to learn about themselves.

"I want them to learn to be willing to share. It is valuable for them to recognize what they've done," she said.

"It is kind of amazing, though. We have really great participation from the actors, and no one is getting credit for any of it," Scott said.

Fedder said that it is special in the way it shows students and their lives.

"It is an exploration of the actors who created the piece. It shows the growth and development of students at that point in their lives," he said.

Scott said she intends to direct more plays of this type, but with a few adjustments she realized needed to be made after getting into the first play.

"We will hold auditions in the fall for another play, but it probably won't be done in the same way again. It is really taxing on the actors and on me to have them write their own scripts," she said.

Scott said she intends to keep the company going while still at K-State.

"It is a very worthwhile experience, so I would like to keep the company going in much the same way. No matter what, the plays will always be a combination of psychology and theater," she said.

Local architectural journal on sale today

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

The theme of this year's Oz architecture journal is the question of what gives a building substance over time.

Put in another way, time itself has made Oz, now in its 20th year of publication, one of the more substantial university architecture journals attracting an increasingly important array of contributors.

The 1998 volume, on sale today in local bookstores, includes essays by architect Steven Holl, architecture Pritzker Prize winners Sverre Fehn and Fumihiko Maki, project overviews by the Los Angeles firm Morphosis, and an interview by the Oz editors with recent campus visitor and architecture critic Kenneth Frampton.

For co-editors Anders Henningsson and Brent Crittenden, both fifth-year seniors in architecture who are graduating next weekend, the journal was a means for exploring a variety of issues within the theme that affect their profession.

"Architecture is at the point where we start to look at architectural history in another way," Henningsson said. "Since the 1850's, there has been this change in architecture through modernism, post-modernism, deconstruction — there's no 'ism' right now. In the journal, we wanted to look at what is a building instead of a stylistic consideration. I don't believe a pure style exists now."

There are a range of voices represented in Oz volume 20, with some essays breaking down further into interesting comparisons. The Irish professor Raymond Ryan pits the elegant New Urbanist vision of Seaside, Fla. against the fragmentary, shifting forms of architect Eric Owen Moss' work in a Los Angeles suburb. Czech Republic architect Libor Monhart argues critiques of new architecture are often shortsighted in that construction is often ignored, and the long-term implications of building quality are not always addressed.

The quality of contributors is impressive for a public university journal, putting Oz on the level of some Ivy League schools, Henningsson said. Oz began in 1978 with then-faculty adviser Ray Streeter, associate professor of architecture, overseeing the creation. The current faculty adviser is Matthew Knox, associate professor of architecture.

Both editors agree that the experience of recruiting contributors and editing their content and visual material — a process that has taken the last year — has encouraged them to want to explore writing about architecture or their work when the become professionals.

"When you make one of these (journals) it gives you confidence in the way you write about this," Crittenden said.

He said he doesn't plan to stop studying architectural theory and exploring new ideas when he begins working.

"In architecture right now, there's so much innovation and ideas that come from academia," Crittenden said. "I would like to stay close to academia."

After graduation, both editors are anticipating a May 22 decision concerning the Skidmore Owings and Merrill traveling scholarship, which both of them have been nominated for and only one will win. Both said they would like to travel Europe studying buildings of this century.

Eventually, the two will be taking up professional practice. Crittenden said he intends on returning to Chicago, the city in which he grew up. Henningsson said he plans to return to his homeland of Sweden.

There were some struggles in the production of volume 20. At one point, a student senator criticized the purchase of a computer for the Oz office using money from the Fine Arts Fee, which Oz is entitled to use. An apology did follow.

"We've almost lost our place as a humanity," Crittenden said. "It displays a misunderstanding of what we do. Obviously, the journal is not going to be of interest to everyone."

Henningsson said the roughly 800-copy journal has become popular throughout the world with written requests coming from all corners of the world.

"It's something the whole university should be proud of," Henningsson said.

Weeks of negotiations end in agreement with Dillons

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — Advertising employees for Dillon Stores ratified a seven-year agreement Thursday between the grocery chain and the Teamsters Union, a month and a half after they went on strike.

The agreement follows a similar contract agreement reached Tuesday for Dillons' Jackson Ice Cream division.

"After many weeks of negotiations, we are pleased to reach a long-term agreement," Dillons spokesman Dennis Gaschler said after the vote Thursday.

Teamsters Local No. 795 President Chuck Mosqueda said that with the agreement reached, the pickets would come down.

"We claim victory," Mosqueda said. "We didn't get everything, of course, but we did get a lot of what they were trying to take away."

One hundred and seventeen Jackson Ice Cream employees went on strike March 22 after negotiations over their contracts, which expired two weeks earlier, fell through. They were joined by 15 advertising workers, warehouse workers and bakery workers who refused to cross the picket lines.

The Teamsters were at odds with Dillons over several contract issues in the Jackson Ice Cream and advertising divisions, including pay, the use of part-time workers, seniority and the grievance procedure, union officials said.

Negotiators for Dillons and the union agreed not to publicly discuss specific details of the advertising agreement Thursday.

The Jackson Ice Cream agreement, approved by a 58-19 vote on Tuesday, allowed Jackson workers to honor picket lines as part of a seven-year contract. It also worked out severance packages for 19 positions which would be cut over the next four years and required some lab workers to take additional college courses to keep their jobs.

The bakery division workers returned to work earlier this week, minus 17 employees who were laid off. Of the 104 workers in the division, all but a handful had walked off the job to support the union strike.

Master plan for campus gets unanimous approval

He said the funding could amount to nearly $150,000 a year in existing university funds.

During the last year, the committee has been devising the master plan, which addresses facilities and infrastructure improvements, and is an attempt to be a living guidebook for future campus development.

Bobbie Flaherty, committee member, questioned whether the document should include a formal process for making changes and for monitoring the compliance of campus building projects with the document.

"I'm just wondering if we have these standards how we monitor if someone is following them," Flaherty said. "Why have them if no one is going to follow them?"

To those questions, Helen Cooper, assistant director of facilities planning, said "The bottom line is this is an outline and are guidelines and we are only advisory."

Many options available for victims

"If you feel uncomfortable, that's the time to start questioning what is going on and thinking about the situation."

Crain said the Women's Center often acts as a resource and referral in cases of alleged sexual harassment. Harassment is a legal matter and students should understand inappropriate behavior that interferes with their learning environment should be reported.

"We don't get tons of sexual harassment cases through here, but we certainly get complaints and act as a referral," Crain said.

"Students don't realize policies against harassment even exist, so when someone comes in, we use the handbook to help them process what happened and see where they want to with it."

Howard said there are an average of 3-6 reports of sexual harassment between students and an average of 4-8 reports of sexual harassment between students and campus authority figures each year.

"We provide training sessions, seminars and workshops on sexual harassment — how to recognize it, report it and deal with it," Howard said.

After the office determines the complaint is valid, it goes to the administrative review team.

"When we've determined the behavior does constitute sexual harassment, then there are sanctions taken against the perpetrator," Howard said.

Cameras bolster security by providing big picture

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

K-State currently has security cameras in various areas around campus. Most are located in parking lots.

By next spring at least two more security cameras will be added to K-State's campus, Director of Public Safety John Lambert said.

"When we see a need, we just put them up when there is money available," he said.

"Many times we install one when a parking lot is built."

Accountant Specialist Peggy Winkler said the cameras vary in cost.

"Last time we went out on bid, we ordered two whole setups," she said. "It cost $2,700 for one whole setup."

Winkler said there are also repair costs and moving costs.

When Parking Services moved to Edwards Hall, it cost $7,000 to get new optics and to upgrade the system, she said.

When one camera is being repaired, there is a spare camera to replace it so an area is never without a camera, Winkler said.

There are 21 monitors in the 24-hour dispatch area. Winkler said the monitors always are being watched.

Statistics show that since the first cameras were installed, crime has decreased for the most part. In 1991, the total number of crime incidents was 209. In 1995, the total was 65.

However, crime increased to 116 incidents in 1996.

There are differing opinions on whether the cameras actually help prevent crime.

K-State campus police director Ronnie Grice said security cameras are a great crime deterrent.

"Before an individual starts thinking about doing something, they think twice because it could be the night that they're caught on camera," Grice said.

Lambert said it is hard to gauge whether the cameras are preventing crime.

"It's very hard to say because we didn't have much crime before," Lambert said.

Captain Charles Beckom said security cameras act as a deterrent for some crimes but not for others.

"There are some things that happen in front of cameras or people that are spontaneous," he said. "I don't think you would be able to prevent or deter them."

Even though security cameras are placed strategically around campus, Grice said students shouldn't rely strictly on them to deter crime.

"People protect people. You can't rely on technology to protect individuals all the time," he said.

Low crime rate gives no cause for ignoring safety precautions system they have in the window of their car.

"People normally have a tendency to advertise what's in their car," Grice said.

Grice also said students advertise their stereo system by playing it loudly.

"Sometimes we have tendency of letting everyone hear the type of sound system we have when we ride around through campus," he said.

Grice said students need to use common sense to prevent themselves from becoming victims of car burglary.

"Do not leave your valuables in your car. You should put in your trunk cameras, purses, books and other items in plain sight," he said.

According to statistics, the least frequent type of crime at K-State is sexual offenses and assault. But, Grice said, students still should be aware when alone.

He said they should take advantage of the Wildcat Walk escort program.

"Even though it is a safe environment, I would like anybody — if you're going to be alone — to call us for an escort," Grice said. "We don't want to get totally complacent because things don't happen."

Director of Public Safety John Lambert said not enough students are taking advantage of the Wildcat Walk.

"More students are using it," he said, "but it could be used more often."

Lambert said even though there are lights and emergency telephones on campus, students should not walk alone.

"Walking from library to residence halls and parking lots to residence halls is probably the most dangerous," he said. "There is a lot of proper cover for an individual wanting to commit a crime."

Grice said students always need to be alert when walking on campus.

"Be familiar with surroundings. Have a general knowledge where phones are in parking lots," he said. "Go into a building if uncomfortable when walking."

Lambert said students need to think ahead before going out alone.

"Be conscious that things can happen," he said.

"Females, walk in twos in lighted areas and take shuttles."

Taking responsibility for one's own safety is most important in crime prevention, Grice said.

"We encourage everyone to take a certain amount of responsibility for own safety," he said. "We can only do so much."

BUILIDING FRIENDSHIPS

Common bonds between teacher, student grows into chance for long-lasting friendship after college

STORY BY LINDSEY FORTMEYER

Last fall, Farrell Webb, assistant professor of family studies and human services, called attendance for the first day of his Black Families class. He joked with his new students by giving them each a nickname, though many of them he didn't know at the time.

When Webb called on student Ryan Munson, senior in family studies and human resources, they immediately began joking together.

Since the first day of class, Webb and Munson have become close friends.

Many professors and students keep a professional relationship, but become friends on another level. While Munson and other students will graduate, their friendships with professors won't end just because they're leaving K-State.

Webb and Munson said their friendship developed early in the semester when two large class projects requiring the use of a complicated computer program were assigned.

Munson repeatedly returned to Webb's office for help on the projects and later Munson stopped to talk to the professor every time he passed his office.

"Even if the door was closed, I'd knock and go in there to talk to him," Munson said. "It was more of a casual kind of talk rather than actual talking about the projects."

Munson said that in and out of class, Webb demonstrated a teaching style he liked. In the classroom, Webb was his professor, outside the classroom he was a friend.

"The questions and the way that he teaches class, it makes you really raise your level of thought to a level that you didn't ever know you could reach," Munson said.

A large amount of class work kept Munson returning to Webb's office to ask questions over the assignments. With frequent office visits, they became good friends and shared one another's sarcastic sense of humor.

"In his office I could sit there and joke around for hours," Munson said. "He's just an amazing person that way. He leaves his teaching in the classroom, unless you ask for it out of class."

Munson also asked Webb for his help on non-class assignments. Webb helped Munson work on his résumé and look for a job.

Munson said he felt like there were several common bonds between himself and his professor.

"He used to work in New York City, and I'm from New Jersey," he said. "I just felt some kind of bond with him because we're both from the East Coast. It's not a common bond that I share with a lot of people out here, being that they are mostly from the Midwest already."

Munson said he considers Webb a closer friend, although he is friends with many of his professors. He wrote Webb a letter of recommendation for the Teacher Of The Year award.

"I wrote a lot of nice things about him, and they weren't just nice things that I wrote," Munson said. "They were nice things that I meant."

Webb said he likes that Munson always comes by his office to ask how he is doing. He said Munson often visits to say hello and chit-chat.

"Ryan is just like other students, but probably a little more secure in himself," Webb said.

Webb said most students don't show they are secure around their professors until late in the semester, but Munson had no problem.

"What Ryan did for the class was that he gave students courage, that they could speak out to me and I would not harm them," Webb said.

"One thing I want students to do is feel free to say things in class because it's very important to hear what they have to say — many times students say brilliant things and I want them to know that."

Webb said most of his students are afraid to make a joke. He said jokes depend on their context, and Munson always uses the right context for his humor. Webb and Munson joked together, but Munson took his schoolwork seriously.

"I'll miss Ryan after graduation," Webb said. "I'll miss his humor and the way he smiles and laughs a lot."

Webb is not the only professor at K-State who will miss his graduating students.

David Andrus, department head and professor of marketing and international business, also has developed friendships with his students that he said he hopes will continue into the future.

Andrus said his department will miss having students like Laura Vermillion around. Vermillion, senior in general management, marketing and international business, graduates May 16.

Andrus first worked with Vermillion when she was president of the marketing club.

"She did a great job taking the club to a higher level of quality," Andrus said. "She worked closely with me to help provide a student perspective on issues the department faced."

He said Vermillion is a good student and friend becausen she is a strong leader and cares a lot about the university.

"She's indicative of the caliber of student that we get in the College of Business and Administration," he said. "It makes my job really fun to get to work with these kind of people.

He said students like Vermillion keep him motivated and interested in improving the program.

Andrus and Vermillion sadi they got to know each other when Vermillion turned to Andrus for help. With her numerous responsibilities and work in the Marketing Club, she started to stop by his office almost every day.

Vermillion said, "I look at him as kind of a mentor — someone who is awesome to go to for advice. He really goes out of his way to do things for his students."

Students, professors build friendships outside classes

She said Andrus is willing to stop whatever work he is doing to talk to students. He is the kind of person who can develop a good relationship with anyone.

"He's a person who knows that college is kind of the means to an end for a lot of us," she said.

"He will do anything he can to help us get a job."

Marci Erikson, graduate student in architectural engineering, said she knew she could depend on the help of Chuck Burton, professor of architectural engineering and construction science.

She met him when she was visiting colleges as a junior in high school, and Burton convinced her study at K-State.

During Erikson's freshman year at K-State, she went into Burton's office several different times to ask for his advice. She said she had difficult a time adjusting to college, and Burton offered his help.

> "HE'S A PERSON WHO KNOWS THAT COLLEGE IS KIND OF THE MEANS TO AN END FOR A LOT OF US."
> LAURA VERMILLION
> senior in general management

Erikson said, "At first I just went into his office to ask about class, but then once I got to know him, he was more of a kind of dad away from home. If I were having a problem and needed someone to talk to that was more of a parent, I'd go to him."

In the classroom, she said Burton teaches in a practical way and in a more real-world sense like when he is out of the classroom.

"With his passion about teaching and towards kids, you can tell that he really cares about his students," she said.

"You can tell the minute you talk to him."

Erikson and Burton's friendship quickly developed and has continued through Erikson's college years. Burton said Erikson knew from the beginning of her schooling that he was not just a teacher in the classroom, but a friend.

"Marci and I just hit it off immediately. She respected me and I certainly respected her," Burton said.

He said he treats all his students as absolute individuals, in and out of the classroom.

Most of Burton's professional relationships with his students are also close individual friendships like Erikson's.

"We will be close until one of us dies, and I'll be that same way with a lot of kids," he said.

Burton said Erikson knows she can always depend on him, even after she graduates.

"My friendships are not just something that, when they walk across the stage, just terminates," he said. "It doesn't terminate — these are lifelong friendships."

PACKING INSTRUCTIONS

If you're leaving K-State, don't forget to take some Wildcat memorabilia

IVAN KOZAR/Collegian

OF ALL THE THINGS COLUMNIST MARY RENEE SMITH WANTS TO TAKE FROM CAMPUS THIS IS ONE OF HER FAVORITES: THE SUNDIAL IN THE QUAD.

Today will be filled with speeches reminding you of high school graduation, and you'll probably pay about as much attention now as you did then.

Everyone will congratulate you, talk about your bright future and how you should never forget your alma mater. You'll get your first K-State alumni T-shirt and more Powercat stuff than you bought your first semester at K-State.

I won't add to the plethora of unsolicited advice you're going to get today and probably have had to listen to for the past few months. I won't string together 55 of the most-used clichés to wish you the best on your graduation.

I will help you pack. I know a few things you won't want to forget as you collect everything you own into boxes and head off into the real world.

Don't forget the two bright-orange stickers you received from your friendly neighborhood parking-control officers. I think Parking Services is the one thing everyone on this campus has in common. Our experiences with the meter-watching folk have made us stronger and taught us valuable lessons about time and money.

Not that it would be convenient but be sure to grab some biscuits and gravy from the K-State Student Union to take with you on your long journey of life. B and G is a spiritual experience. One learns to appreciate the brash texture of the sausage gravy against the soft mothering feel of the biscuit. As the morning wears on, the warmth in your stomach continues to remind you of the breakfast and the comforts of home.

Many people have helped you along the way on your journey through higher education. Don't forget to take along Nancy from the Union. She's the mastermind behind the B and G. Each day she greeted you with a smile and the most important meal of the day. If you could take Nancy, every day of the rest of your life would begin with someone who cares about you.

If each graduate would take one brick from Denison Hall, it would solve a problem that has plagued this campus for years and give you a great memento of your years here at good ol' K-State.

The neato chairs up in the Cat's Pause would be a nice addition to your stash. You know, the ones that spin around and look like they should have stereo speakers in them.

There are numerous pieces of art around campus I'm sure you have grown attached to: the large phallic fork outside King Hall, the tapeworm outside Kedzie Hall or maybe the sundial in the quad outside Willard Hall. Sure, they'd be hard to pack, but wouldn't they make great yard art?

Please don't really try to pack these things and take them. I'm pretty sure Nancy has a family that would miss her, and Bernard Pitts gets grumpy when you steal the chairs from the Union.

Do pack away the memories of people, places and things that have given you joy. I said I wasn't going to give advice. I lied. All the stuff proved you learned to get your degree is important, but years from now the biscuits and gravy will be the memory that makes you smile.

It also will be the true motivation for the next big responsibility you have as an alumni of K-State: donating cash so the rest of us can have the same great experiences.

"THE MOST IMPORTANT THING I COULD HAVE DONE WAS TO HAVE STUDIED MORE AND PLAYED LESS, BUT THEN THE TRUE COLLEGE EXPERIENCE NEVER WOULD HAVE EVOLVED."

Well, the job is almost done. I have exactly 8 days until graduation, and then life will be absolutely wonderful. Like most graduates, I have been looking back and wondering what would have made my college career better.

The most important thing I could have done was to have studied more and played less, but then the true college experience never would have evolved. Here are a few things.

Wish #1 — I wish Union Stateroom cafeteria would not feel obligated to charge for the little squares of butter. I am a big fan of their biscuits and fan loaves, but I refuse to pay another nickel for butter.

Butter should be one of those free condiments. When I come back as an alumna and want to eat a cheeseburger, it probably will cost me a quarter for each pump of ketchup.

Wish #2 — I wish K-State would return to its original seal that states, "Kansas State University of Agriculture and Applied Sciences." I believe the university should embrace promotion of our agricultural heritage instead of ignoring our roots and accepting the "bastard seal," particularly because we are one of the original land-grant universities.

Wish #3 — Why can't the men's basketball team grant me the wish of actually beating the University of Kansas in Manhattan? I go to the games, cheer until the point of exhaustion, and we still never win. Then, to add to this humiliation, I have to go and face my aunt and uncle, who are the epitome of obsessed Jayhawks. Just once I would like to go home at Easter and have bragging rights about total Wildcat athletic domination. But no, I must sit in the corner and eat my ham alone.

Wish #4 — I wish Waters 41 was actually a pretty room with decent air conditioning. For those of you who are not political science majors, this is the room that received wonderful press when the deer crashed through the window. Anyway, 99 percent of my classes are in this room, and all I can say is the environment does not inspire me to learn. The walls are drab, the lighting makes that annoying humming sound, and the only view the windows provide is of the smokers puffing away their lives with their "cancer sticks."

Wish #5 — I wish the university would require all students to purchase a Franklin Planner to organize their lives and just look cool. I did not learn this important lesson until I met my dear friends Jennafer, Jake and Gabe, and they showed me the light. I know because of them and their guidance I am a better person.

Wish #6 — I wish Student Publications the Student Governing Association actually would try to be civil to each other. However, the "power of the pen" and the "power of the purse" are constantly at war. It would be nice to have a student newspaper that supports the people in student government and a student government that accepts the role of the student newspaper.

Wish #7 — I wish "Greek-letter frats" would model themselves after the excellence of the FarmHouse fraternity. FarmHouse has had the oldest alcohol-free house policy on campus, since 1921, and the Farmers are just good guys. Plus, my place of employment, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, is named after a FarmHouse alumnus, so it has to be an awesome fraternity.

Wish #8 — I wish everyone would have the tremendous K-State education I had and the lifelong friends who have made my past four years here memorable. I wish everyone happiness as they move to different places and take on new opportunities. Plus, I wish everyone to have a comfortable couch for when I come to visit. Watch out, Casey, I will be in Boston soon to visit.

Happy graduation!

Have a great summer!

PAMELA MANNING

Pamela is a senior in public relations. You can send e-mail to Pamela at pdm6732@ksu.edu.

My life has been reduced to song titles. "The Party's Over." "This Is It." "I'm Outta Here." "So Long, It's Been Good to Know You."

With that, I say adios to my weekly column and (for now) to K-State. Oh yeah, and I have no stinking clue what happens next.

Yes, I have a job in the Bay area, but the urgency to get there isn't as big to me anymore. Fortunately, I can start whenever I get there.

But there's another fly in the ointment. I've had a few new offers come along from various parts of the country, and now I'm more confused than ever. So for now, with my mind a complete ball of wax and finals coming, I just can't think about leaving. At least not out loud, anyway.

What I do know for sure, though, is that I'll be back to visit my soon-to-be alma mater. It would be such a gross mistake to forget about the institution that brought me so much. I would be remiss not to give back some of what I've gotten, especially financially. Academic scholarships came my way that made the financial burden of college practically non-existent. For that I, and my credit rating, will be forever grateful.

I already have promised myself that when I become an adult (again!) I plan on making financial contributions to this institution in the form of academic scholarships. I want others to have the same opportunities and hopefully garner as much out of their time here as I have.

When I came to Manhattan, I had the usual misgivings. For the first time, I would be living a reasonable distance from family. I was pretty much alone. And class sizes? I'd spent all of my college life at community colleges. Not only was I unfamiliar with the university setting, I was sure I'd spend half my time getting lost. I didn't, at least not forever.

I found that the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications was located centrally. It's a good thing, too. Too many classes in different buildings meant too many choices.

Remember me? I'm the Libra; decision-making isn't my forte. I easily could have ended up a social science major, or a history aficionado, or interior design student. Over the years, these were all things I had wanted to do. After I'd met with a journalism school adviser, though, I knew I wanted to spend most of my time in Kedzie Hall. And I did; just ask the secretary.

The time spent in Kedzie brought me some of the best instructors in public relations, radio-TV and electronic journalism. Of course, everybody says that about the professors in their major. And like a true journalism schmooze, I really mean it.

By the end of the first semester, I was in love. Not with a guy or anything. I was starting to love my life. No longer was I playing an 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. game of chance that included pantyhose, high heels and lying for my boss. While I was still up at the crack of dawn, what I did after that was pretty much up to me. Usually I could be found in class, though sometimes even the Spirit couldn't get me there.

I drop-kicked the pantyhose/high heels combo. Being able to wear jeans and running shoes became a way of life. Of course, lack of clean laundry always necessitated more formal dress. And the only time anyone caught me without my face painted was when I was sleepwalking. That's not vanity, mind you; that's just not wanting to scare anyone else more than I want to scare myself.

Once those pre-major courses were out of the way, I finally was allowed to take more of the classes I really wanted. Even though some of the course requirements weren't what I'd hoped for, or even ones in which I did well, they did serve a purpose. First, they made me realize what I was and wasn't capable of understanding. I knew I'd never understand anything about new digital technology. But they also provided me with instructors who cared enough to try and hand-hold me through my struggle, even when I struggled so hard I wouldn't let them help me.

Then summer school came along. Not with fun bells and whistles; it was more like "Taps." But I knew two things: I had an apartment to pay for, which meant working during the summer, and if I didn't take a couple of classes, I'd have a much heavier load in the fall. As much as I didn't want to do anything that summer, I'm glad I did everything. You wouldn't think that taking ethics or Spanish in the summer is 10 times better than taking them in a regular semester, especially while you're gazing out of the window in a hot classroom. Then you take them, and they're over before you know it. That's two classes I didn't have to see again.

There was also an eeriness about town that first summer. I could turn left at Bluemont Avenue and Third Street without the time changing on me. And there was no waiting in Aisle 7 anywhere. It was unreal. And real nice.

I wondered what the rest of the people in Manhattan did during the summer, the ones who live here year-round. Do they look forward to summers, holidays and spring breaks, when they can have the town back to themselves? Do they peek out of their windows, knowing that, albeit temporary, it's OK for them to come out?

Finally, August 1997 had arrived. Over the next nine months, my friends and I would be counting down to our baby, graduation day. Like having a baby, things have gotten bigger and bigger, then in one shining moment it's going to be over. And we'll probably be paying for it the rest of our lives.

I thought I'd be immune, but senioritis hit me hard. Waiting until the last semester to take science lecture and lab courses was not the smartest thing to do. If you blinked, you might have missed me in class. No one ever should have told me that all I need is a 2.5 grade point average in my major and I just have to pass everything else. I'm more than good-to-go in my major; it's that "everything else" course where I'll just squeak by.

But that's OK. I've proven my point to myself. I took the 10-year college plan and set it on it's rear, I mean, ear. I accomplished what I set out to do when I moved here, and that's all that matters. I'm tired. I need sleep.

Whether you came here as a freshman or, like me, transferred at some point, I hope you'll take away as many memories of the good times as I did.

Look for me at graduation. I'll be the one wiping away the tears.

Graduate wonders, 'Has it all been worth it?'

graduation FEAR

VIEW POINT

CHRIS DEAN

Chris is a senior in print journalism. You can send e-mail to Chris at crdean@ksu.edu.

"BUT MAYBE, JUST MAYBE, I HAVE LEARNED SOMETHING AT K-STATE AND CAN NOW REALIZE THESE FEARS, TOO, WILL PASS AND BECOME THE JOKES OF MY THIRTIES."

As I prepare to walk across a temporary platform, shake hands with K-State's most important people and accept a piece of paper that cost me, or rather my parents, several thousand dollars, I ask myself, "Has it all been worth it?"

I look back over four years of studying, reading, last-minute cramming and listening to professors drone on and on about the importance of cell structure and wonder where the time went.

It seems like only yesterday I was wandering the halls of Farrell Library trying to find my way out of the maze. Then again, it was only yesterday I wandered the halls of Hale. But that aside, the time has passed so fast it looks like a photo taken from the passenger window of a locomotive.

Entering college, all the nerves were set to high gear as I worried about what to major in, what classes to take, where to live, whether to pledge a fraternity and how to keep in touch with the high school friends.

It's amazing how little any of it mattered.

The past four years are a mishmash of classes, parties and friends, and although I am not completely clear about the memory of my roommate lecturing to me about Cultural Anthropology at Scoreboard, the mishmash is a good one.

Even the bad times are blurred into, if nothing else, humorous moments of history. The brain-numbing bouts of writer's block at 4 a.m. are memorable, if for no other reason than I was given the opportunity to research breach-of-contract law for all those people who vowed these would be the best years of my life.

As much as I hate to say it, those people were right. For those of you who are hanging around for a few more years, never doubt that. When finals sneak up on you and you are cursing everything from your roommate for snoring to your carpet for being so quiet, take a moment to think back.

Every year, the finals don't get harder. You just forget how hard they were last year. As I contemplate never taking another final as long as I live, I realize studying is a fleeting moment of pain, like a root canal without the anesthetic, but tomorrow it's gone and something much scarier is out there, and I'm not talking about a sadistic Parking Services officer. I mean the real world.

Now I don't mean to get overly philosophic, like a grandfather cheerfully relating his days of hiking through 20 feet of snow barefoot uphill both ways. It's just that I've seen the real world, or a portion therein, and now am faced with the possibility of being there forever. Stressing over the class thing seems pretty sorry.

After all, I have no intention of remembering the seven attributes of a good quote, but drinking gin fizzes with the professor will stick in my mind forever.

As I look into the sea of faces that make up the obnoxious two-hour long graduation ceremony, I am not looking for the guy who sat next to me in Expository Writing II but for the guy who threw up on me at Porters.

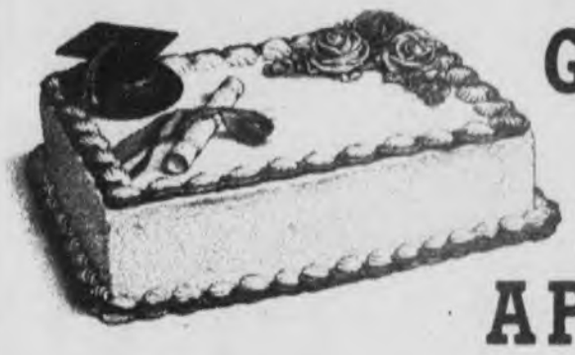
Quick experiment: write down the result to the third Principals of Biology lab. Now sing the third track on Jimmy Buffet's "Songs You Know By Heart."

Which in your college experience is more important?

Not to discount the classes. I have yet to get grades from five of them that will validate my diploma, so of course classes are the most important part.

They are the gateway to getting a job, after all. And that is the next big step, even if graduate school is in your future. The job thing looms ahead of you like a wheel lock when your teacher asks to speak with you for a moment after class.

I am sweating right now at the thought that I have to a) pass my classes, b) get a job, c) get a job with a paycheck on which I can support myself and d) support myself and that strange demon of student debt.



But maybe, just maybe, I have learned something at K-State and can now realize these fears, too, will pass and become the jokes of my thirties. Maybe I even will stop sweating it all together and accept that everything I learned at K-State, periodicals or not, is enough to help me through anything. From the classes to the dates to the friends to the fights, it's been the best education of all.

So morals:

Go to class, take the notes, learn the notes, pass the test, get the diploma, get the job.

Don't stress. As I now officially have become the pathetic graduate, nostalgic for a past that is but a couple days behind me, I will tell you there is a lot of time in between these things and a lot of times you will never forget. Just have fun and never stop enjoying this time.

Yeah, it has been worth it.

DIES JAILED

K-State player pleads no contest to charges

K-State basketball player Manny Dies pleaded no contest to amended charges of disorderly conduct and probation violation and spent 48 hours in jail last week stemming from a February incident.

Besides spending 48 hours in jail for the misdemeanor, he also has to perform 40 hours of community service.

County Attorney Bill Kennedy said he filed a motion to revoke Dies' probation for misdemeanor criminal damage to property charges related to a May 1997 incident involving K-State Collegian columnist Todd Stewart.

"He was order to spend 48 hours in jail on that matter," he said. "A separate 48 hours."

Dies was originally charged with having an open container of alcohol and obstructing legal process. Sunday, Feb. 22, Dies was arrested for open container of alcohol, obstruction legal process, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Dies was not charged with possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia.

In the Feb. 24 issue of the K-State Collegian, Alvan Johnson, director of the Riley County Police Department, said Dies was sitting in his car and blocking traffic on 1200 Moro St. Johnson noticed the open container when he asked Dies to move.

Dies pleaded innocent to the charges of open container and drug paraphernalia at his first appearance in Riley County District Court.

Construction begins on 5th Habitat house

National Home Ownership Week kicked off Saturday when construction began on Manhattan's fifth Habitat for Humanity home, located at 504 S. Manhattan Ave.

Debra Johnson and her three sons will move into the house in September, when the house is scheduled to be completed.

The house is one of 205 Oprah Houses sponsored by Oprah Winfrey when she launched her Oprah Angel Network in September 1997.

"I'm just grateful to be getting a special house, not just any house," Johnson said.

She said she applied for a Habitat for Humanity house three times before she was finally accepted.

Johnson swore the third time she applied would be the last.

When she received the phone call three weeks ago that she had been accepted, she thought it was a joke. Later, she found out the call was from Habitat for Humanity, and it was no joke.

BROWNBACK

"It means a lot to me, especially after trying so many times. It's a real blessing," Johnson said.

Johnson's blessing was brought to her through the Manhattan Area Builders Association, local realtors and the Pi Beta Phi sorority.

Members of each organization spoke at a small ceremony before construction began Saturday.

Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., helped on the construction of the Habitat house Saturday afternoon. He was able to meet Johnson and work side-by-side with her building the house.

Brownback said Johnson was happy to be helping with the construction of her home. He also said he was glad to be working alongside the people he was helping.

He said Habitat for Humanity is a great charity because it involves both the person receiving the charity and the people giving. The two entities have been separate for too long, he said.

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, was present to speak on behalf a project called "The House that Congress Built." She said the project is designed to build decent, affordable homes for needy families.

She said there is a high-energy level within the Manhattan and Topeka areas for the project.

Mark Meseke, media relations specialist for the local Habitat for Humanity affiliate, said they normally do not work on weekends, but construction on the house would begin last Saturday, and they would work through the rest of the week.

To volunteer to help with construction on the Habitat for Humanity house call Ralph Teaford at 539-7886.

Their goal was to have the subflooring done by the end of the day on Saturday and to have the roof up by Saturday, June 13.

Elevator blast near Wichita

Brian R. Crisp
Kansas State Collegian

Four specialists from the 82nd Medical Company at Fort Riley were dispatched at 10 a.m. Monday to Haysville, Kan., to aid in the rescue effort of grain elevator workers.

Four workers were trapped by tons of falling debris while working in tunnels under the elevator. The explosion took place at 9:15 a.m. at the northeast corner of the DeBruce Grain Company elevator southwest of Wichita. Two were killed and eight others were injured in the blast.

Deborah Skidmore, director of public affairs at Fort Riley, said the helicopter crew arrived on scene before 11:30 a.m. The crew consisted of two pilots, one crew chief and one medical officer.

Skidmore said the crew lowered the medical officer into the grain elevator by means of a hoist attached to the helicopter. At least one victim was hoisted out of the elevator in this fashion. Survivors who were trapped on the roof were rescued using a crane.

"All four crew members are hoist certified, so they got to use all their training today," Skidmore said.

Skidmore said the crew will remain at the blast site until all victims are accounted for.

"Last year there were 16 grain elevator explosions in the United States with one fatality and 14 injuries, so this exceeds anything I've seen in a while," Tim Herrman, extension leader for the K-State department of grain science and industry, said.

Herrman said grain dust contains high amounts of carbon and burns rapidly depending on the size of the particles.

Elevator explosions can also be caused by flammable gas such as liquid propane stored near the elevator, Charles Martin, research engineer for the USDA grain marketing and research center, said.

"In order for grain dust to cause damage, there must be a suspended concentration of about 50 grams per cubic meter. If you were inside such a suspension, you wouldn't be able to see your hand in front of your face," Martin said.

There also must be an ignition source. Possible sources of ignition could include an overheated bearing on a conveyor belt or sparks from repairs such as welding, Martin said.

The primary explosion can shake the entire elevator complex and stir up dust in other elevators. This can cause larger secondary explosions in other elevators.

"The fireball can travel through air vents popping the tops off one by one," Herrman said.

Jack Chang, research engineer in charge of of USDA research center elevator in Manhattan, said there are a number of ways to prevent explosions.

"We have two dust control systems. First, there is a vacuum that prevents dust from accumulating. Next, there is an oil sprayer," he said. "We also try to eliminate the source of the spark. (There is) absolutely no smoking (allowed)."

Workers trapped in tunnel underneath rubble

Associated Press

Haysville, Kan. — Four people working in a tunnel underneath a grain elevator were trapped under tons of rubble after an explosion rocked the elevator Monday morning.

The explosion at the DeBruce Grain Inc. elevator killed two people and sent eight people to area hospitals. Eighteen people, including six who had to be rescued by helicopter from the roof, were able to leave the building after the explosion.

Crews of tactical rescue workers and structural engineers were inside the building Monday afternoon trying to reach the four trapped people, said Ken Cox, division chief of the Sedgwick County Fire Department.

The tunnel runs the length of the three-quarter mile elevator and is used to move grain. Because harvest has just begun, the workers were believed to be moving grain at the time of the explosion, Cox said.

Asked about their chances of survival, Cox said "We are always optimistic. I would never count them out."

Officials were flying around the structure in a helicopter using infrared equipment to see if any more people had been blown out of the building, he said.

The explosion about 9:20 a.m. may have been caused by a spark that ignited highly-combustible grain dust, said Fred Irvin, spokesperson for the Sedgwick County Emergency Management Office.

The explosion knocked a hole the size of a small house out of the headhouse, which is in the center of the structure, and also blew out concrete on both ends of the elevator.

Gov. Bill Graves and Kansas Agriculture Secretary Allie Devine flew to the site to see what state aid may be needed.

"I want to be certain the state is prepared to help where possible in this accident," Graves said.

Irvin said one of the fatalities was found inside the headhouse. Other details on the deaths were not available.

KSU PARKING SERVICES
108 Edwards Hall 532-PARK (7275)

Kansas State University's Department of Parking Services welcomes you to campus and hopes you have a pleasant and successful summer. The employees of the department want to help you have an enjoyable experience in Manhattan. One way of keeping your frustration at a low level is to receive no parking tickets on campus. Listed below are several procedures to help you remain ticket free during the next three months.

1. You may park in any lot during the summer months as long as your vehicle displays a valid permit. But, please do not park illegally in a reserved stall, a disabled stall, or a service stall. Meters must be paid during normal business hours.
2. Always display a current KSU parking permit in non-metered lots. If utilizing a parking meter, allow adequate time to prevent a ticket for expired meter.
3. If for any reason you end your association with KSU, please return your parking permit to Parking Services. Depending upon when your permit is returned, you may be entitled to a refund.
4. Your permit has a monetary value. Therefore, please lock your vehicle when it is not occupied. There is a cost for permit replacement.
5. Do not loan your vehicle or permit. Citations are the responsibility of the permit holder and/or vehicle owner.
6. The summer of 1998 is expected to see a lot of construction/maintenance work and conferences on campus. Parking Services will attempt to notify the public when the construction/maintenance/conference schedule may effect parking lot availability. Conferences and large events occurring on campus include Orientation, BB Gun Marksmanship Finals, Boys State and Athletic Camps. Parking Services also has a parking lot paint schedule that will affect many individuals. Please bear with us so we can get the tasks accomplished. Check our web site for dates of known events.
7. June 21-27, 1998 is Driving and Bicycle Safety Week. Always practice safety procedures and use common sense while driving or riding a bicycle.

If you have any questions regarding parking, please check with Parking Services at 2-7275

Student's website saves students time, money

CAIT PURINTON
Kansas State Collegian

In a matter of eight hours, Bob Fox, senior in computer science, created an online forum called the Wildcat Book Exchange where students can buy and sell books with other K-State students.

"I created it to save students money," Fox said.

After he created the web site in May, Fox sent an e-mail to all computer information systems students telling them about the new forum and asking them to spread the word along to other friends.

▶ More info?
The Wildcat Book Exchange can be found at www.dce.ksu.edu/~foxr/books/

One month after the site was created, Fox said there are approximately 30 users online and 50 books registered on the Web page.

Fox got the idea for the online forum by talking to friends at work in the Division of Continuing Education. When he and his friends were talking about selling books back, Fox, who does a lot of work online including putting classes online, said it seemed natural to start up the Wildcat Book Exchange.

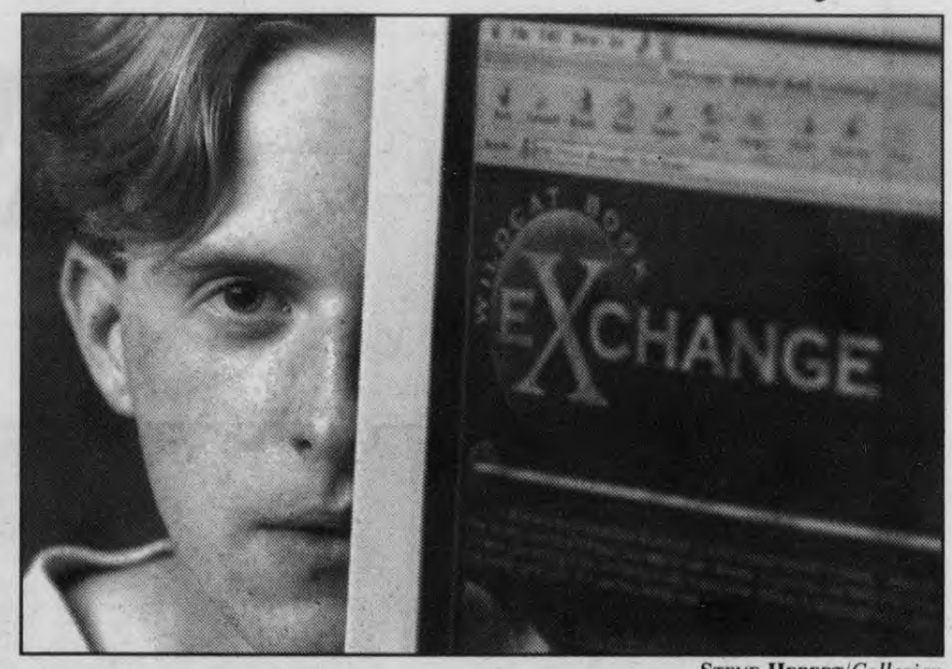
The site is not an official site endorsed by K-State, but Fox said ideally he would like to see it as an addition to the K-State Access Technology System.

"Systematically, it's realistic. I don't know if it's going to happen," he said.

Fox said the advantages of exchanging books online with other students are saving money and convenience.

He said in book stores students basically have a 50-percent exchange rate, and the advantage of selling books to another student is they can save 25 percent both ways.

Fox said the only problem with the site is people don't know enough about it since he was only able to contact computer information systems students when he finished designing the Web page.



Through the Wildcat Book Exchange, Fox ended up selling a book to a friend he didn't realize was looking for the book. Andy Stemmons, a graduate in information systems, ended up selling a book back to Fox, also.

Stemmons said the Wildcat Book Exchange is a great idea that allows for easily-accessible ways of sharing information.

"It has great potential for saving students time and money. The Web is a perfect environment for this type of application," Stemmons said.

Stemmon's brother, James Stemmons, a freshman in computer information systems, has entered some of his books online but hasn't sold any books yet. He said his books aren't selling because the classes are not available in the fall semester.

However, he plans on purchasing a CIS 500 book from the Web site.

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

BOB FOX, SENIOR IN INFORMATION SYSTEMS, HAS CREATED A WEB PAGE CALLED THE WILDCAT BOOK EXCHANGE, WHERE STUDENTS CAN BUY AND SELL BOOKS WITH OTHER K-STATE STUDENTS.

"I think it's a great idea. My brother for a long time used the CIS mail account to get books, now they're on the web so anyone can use it," James Stemmons said.

To use the Wildcat Book Exchange, students log on to the site and are able to look up books for sale from other students, add a book to the list or remove a book from the list after they have sold it.

If a student is looking to buy a book, they can click the book list to see if the book they are looking for is on sale. If it is, they can click on the class title to get the contact person's name, phone number or e-mail address and how much they are asking for the book.

Easy-to-follow instructions are included on the web page for adding and removing books from the list.

In the instance a student may be concerned about security and entering their phone number or e-mail address into the Internet, Fox said people could already get the information from KATS before his system was created.

"It's just a part of the system. If you want to sell a book, you have to tell people how to reach you. If you don't want to do that, don't use it," he said.

The Wildcat Book Exchange can be found at www.dce.ksu.edu/~foxr/books/.

HEY, BATTAH

Little League Lawsuit

Naugatuck, Conn. — A little league player who acknowledged breaking the rules when he swung his bat in the dugout has been sued by a 10-year-old teammate who was struck in the head.

Michael Albert, 10, was warming up for a Union City Little League game in 1996 when he struck Brittany Gauvin in the head. They were both 8 at the time.

Michael said it was an accident. "We even went to her house and brought her candy," he said.

The lawsuit, filed in April, says Brittany suffered head trauma, bruises, dizziness, swelling, headaches and short-term memory loss. The lawsuit seeks money for past and future medical expenses.

It accuses Michael of negligence for swinging his bat in the dugout, where a sign says no bats are allowed. League rules state batters cannot pick up a bat until called to the batter's box.

Union City Little League also is accused of negligence.

A lawyer for Michael and his mother, who also was named as a defendant, said the matter should not be in court.

KCK district turning to alternative-school plan

Kansas City, Kan. — The Kansas City, Kan., School District is planning to become the first district in the country to turn all of its schools into alternative schools.

The changes, which include keeping small groups of teachers and students together for years, begin this fall in Wyandotte High School and the nine middle and elementary schools. The district's 32 other schools will join the program in the next three years.

The district is adopting the plan to reduce its 40-percent dropout rate and increase its test scores to at least meet state averages.

"For the first time we are standing up and saying, 'We will not let this continue,'" said Steven Gering, who is leading the improvement effort for the district. "We understand our district has to change."

The district has been working on sweeping changes since the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation brought consultant Jim Connell to Kansas City two years ago to discuss reform.

"Kansas City, Kan., is out ahead of everybody," said Connell, president of the Institute for Research and Reform in Education in Philadelphia. If district leaders succeed, he said they will be a model for the rest of the country.

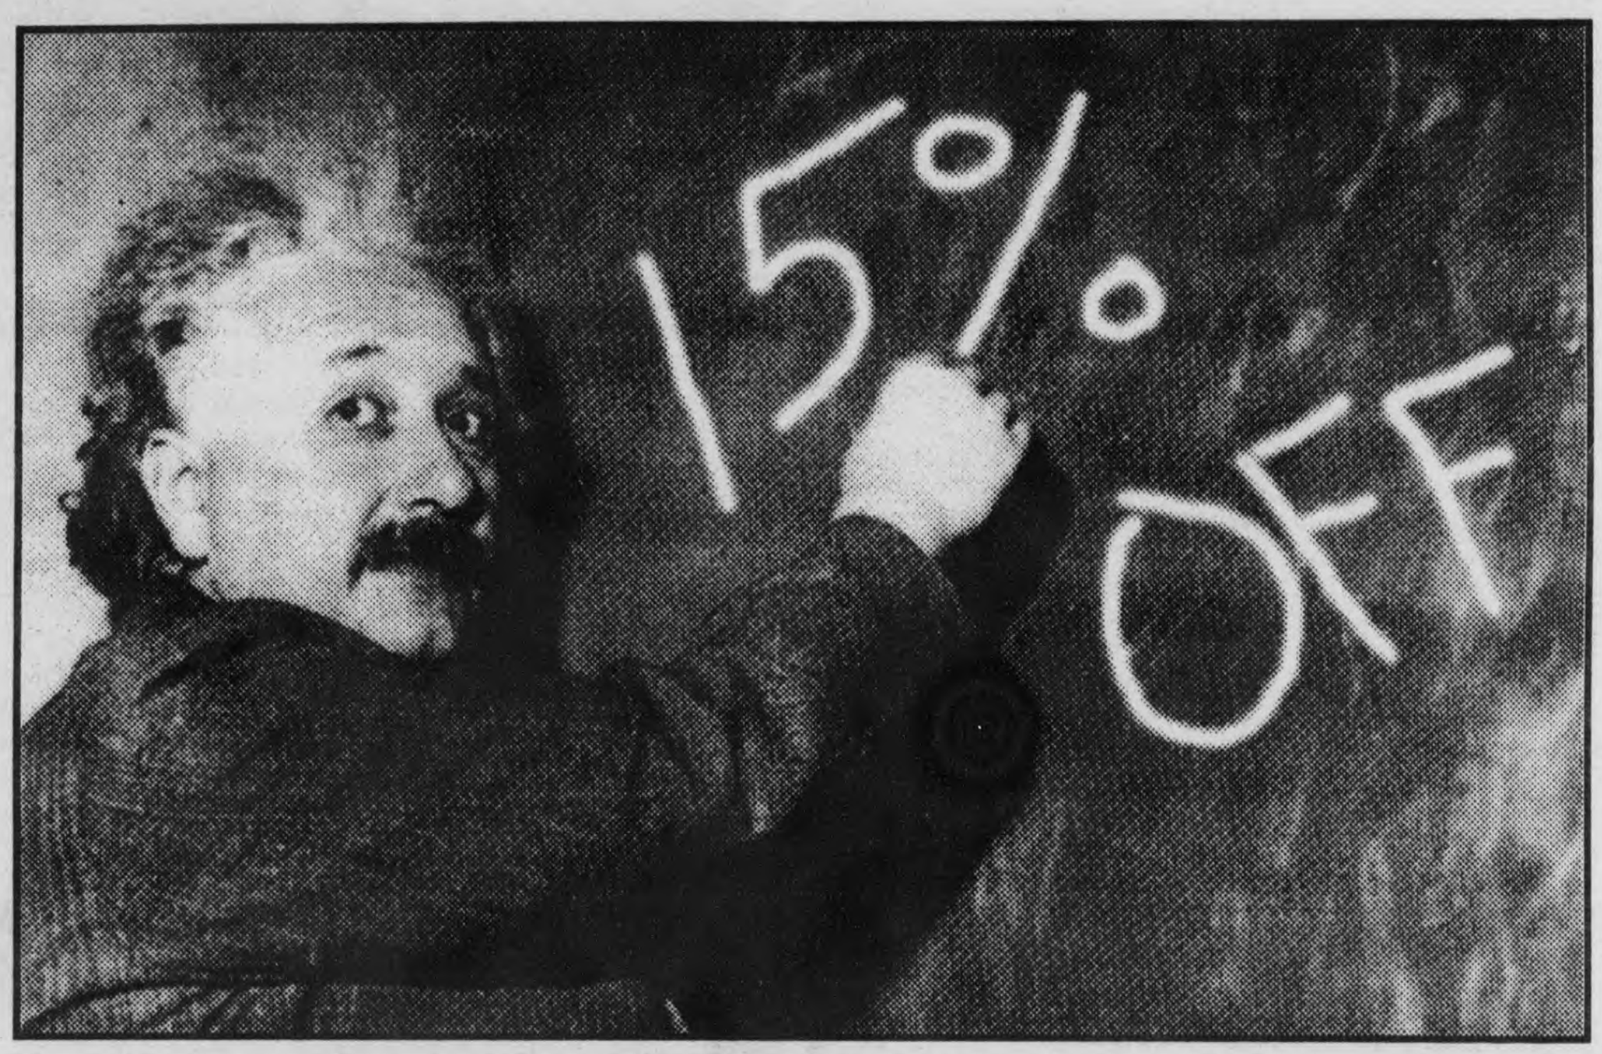
Teachers generally were not happy with the proposal when Gering first visited Wyandotte High School a year ago.

"None of us were nice about it because for a lot of teachers you say 'school reform' and they go, 'Oh yeah, here we go again,'" art teacher Patty Kamper said. "The district throws all this stuff at you, and you get no follow-through.

"It's lucky (Gering) walked out in one piece."

The new program, called First Things First includes seven features: lowering student/adult ratios; keeping teachers and students together over time; setting high, clear and fair behavioral and academic standards; using a variety of teaching methods; making students, teachers, parents and the community all responsible for learning; giving teachers training, support and instructional autonomy and being flexible about how teacher teams use their time, money and building space.

It is up to teachers and staff at each school to decide how to incorporate the features.



Mary Stewart, a curriculum specialist who is coordinating the changes at Wyandotte, said the school has formed seven learning communities: performing arts, visual arts, vocational technology, business, health careers/life sciences, hospitality and humanities.

The school's 1,300 students have picked their communities for the fall, and they'll stay in them, with the same core group of teachers, throughout high school.

Besides theme courses, each community will focus on the basics of English, science, math and history.

Annual expo focuses on outdoor safety

▶AFTER 8 YEARS, EXPO MAY CALL IT QUITS DUE TO DECREASING TURNOUT.

Kelly Dickson
Kansas State Collegian

The 8th Annual Water Wise Expo and Outdoor Recreation Fair on Saturday might have been be the last.

"It takes a tremendous amount of time to coordinate, and we have lost a lot of participants," said Cynthia Dierks, a park ranger with the Corps of Engineers at Milford Lake.

Dierks was one of the original organizers of the event when it started.

This year's Expo included water-rescue demonstrations by the Fort Riley Fire Department Boogie Board Rescue team and drug searches by the Fort Riley Military Police. The Blue Valley Yacht Club, the K-State Rowing Team and K-State Sailing Club also did demonstrations.

The Expo started out as a water-safety event where rescue divers, the Riley County EMS, Fort Riley Fire Department and the Corps of Engineers tried to prevent drownings, said Steve Prockish, park ranger with the Corps of Engineers at Tuttle Creek State Park.

The commission that plans the event decided it was time to expand the Expo to include more than just water safety.

"Just water safety kind of turns the public off, so we tried to do more outdoor safety like hunting safety," Prockish said. "We need the community to spread the work around."

The purpose of the event is to teach the public water safety in a non-threatening situation. The commission thought that letting people watch demonstrations while enjoying themselves with their families would lead to more information sinking in.

"This is a way to get the same information across, but by having free food and giving away prizes, we will get more people to come. It is probably going to stick a lot better in their minds out here than in a classroom," Dierks said.

"Also, people take these guys for granted. It is really important the public realize their jobs are not all fun or frivolous," Dierks said. "Their lives are at risk when they are doing their job. The training they go through is very physical and it is important that the public sees them and can talk to them in a non-critical and non-threatening situation."

Graves v. Miller primary could be nasty, catty fight

Topeka — Indications already are that the Republican gubernatorial primary campaign will be a nasty one, with both candidates' supporters using their claws early.

Gov. Bill Graves, a moderate, faces former state GOP David Miller, a conservative. There have been plenty of signs, even before the candidate filing deadline, of the contempt each side has for the other.

Take, for example, the comment Mike Matson, Graves' campaign spokesperson, had for reporters immediately after Graves announced that Lt. Gov. Gary Sherrer would remain as his running mate.

"I just want to note that we had more people for our lieutenant governor announcement than Miller had for his governor announcement," Matson said. "Just a little spin."

In his announcement of his candidacy a month ago, Miller said he believes voters have embraced the state GOP's conservative platform and want a governor "who embraces those principles, not one who attacks or belittles them."

He also declared that, on his opposition to abortion, "I know who I am" and that his views "will not change just because it is an election year."

After being introduced as Graves' running mate, Sherrer used his remarks to take conservatives to task. The theme of a Saturday rally for Miller in Wichita was "restoring family values."

"A lot of people want to run around and talk about family values like it's easy," Sherrer said.

Sherrer said he resents it when people "sloganize" about deep family relationships. He said, "We are not arrogant about it. We don't carry it around on our sleeves."

Even the timing of Graves' announcement of his running mate seemed catty. Graves asked Sherrer a month ago to run with him but did not announce it until it represented an opportunity to take some attention away from Miller's rally.

There are a number of reasons for the disdain Graves supporters and Miller supporters have for each other.

Some of it is the superiority the righteous feel over unwashed heathens.

Many of Miller's supporters are conservative Christians, convinced that the Bible justifies their political positions. Once, years ago, when a reporter let slip with a non-religious "Jesus Christ" in his presence, Miller, then a state legislator said, "A personal friend of mine."

Many of Graves' supporters are traditional Republicans, what political analysts like to call the country club set. The conservatives who have taken over the party represent a new, more working-class element in the GOP.

Kansas Republicans should expect plenty of cutting remarks to fly between camps frequently before they vote on Aug. 4.

Alumna becomes dean

BRIAN R. CRISP
Kansas State Collegian

Students in the College of Human Ecology should expect to see a new face around Justin Hall next fall.

Carol E. Kellett, a 1969 graduate of K-State, has been appointed to the position of Dean of the College of Human Ecology. Kellett will succeed Barbara S. Stowe, who is retiring.

KELLETT

Kellett, who received her degree in home economics, said she looks forward to returning to her home state.

"It is an incredible and wonderful experience to be back in the place where you were a student," Kellett said. "Much of the campus hasn't changed since I was here. We had purple-pride days, except now the difference is the football team actually wins."

Among Kellett's goals for next year are increasing money for student scholarships and increasing communication between staff and students.

"I wouldn't be where I am if it weren't for scholarships," she said. "I'd like to hear of students' experiences with Human Ecology and build on the goods and address any issues."

Kellett said she first read of the position in an ad in the Chronicle of Higher Education. Sharon Nichols, a personal friend and K-State alumna, suggested that Kellett apply.

Kellett sent an application and résumé and then was contacted by Rebecca Gould, leader of the search committee, to schedule a phone interview.

Her first formal interview was scheduled for April 7 and 8. Kellett said there were four candidates for the first interview and two for the second, which was in May.

"She seemed very energetic. She was my favorite of all the candidates," Karen Dowell, graduate student in dietetics, said.

Suzanne Auten, administrative assistant to the provost, said that the committee made a suggestion to Provost James R. Coffman, who concurred. Auten said Kellett's contract starts in early July.

Kellett earned her masters and doctoral degrees in home economics from the University of Missouri. Kellett has served as home economics department chair for two universities: Central Missouri State University and California State University at Long Beach. In spring 1997, Kellett received K-State's Distinguished Service in Human Ecology Award.

Last shuttle crew departs Mir

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Space shuttle Discovery popped the latches and pulled away from Mir on Monday, ending one phase of U.S.-Russian cooperation and ushering in the next: an international space station that should be flying by the end of the year.

Before the nine astronauts and cosmonauts parted company, the commander of the Russian space station pressed a 2-foot wrench into the hands of Discovery's skipper, Charles Precourt.

"Charlie, take this wrench," Talgat Musabayev said. "It's sort of a relay stick from an old lady, station Mir, to the international space station."

Precourt said, "We're going to need this for all the work that we have ahead of us. ... The whole Phase 1 has been fantastic, and we're looking forward to working with you again."

Phase 2 gets under way in November when construction of the international space station begins in orbit. It will take five years, 43 flights and 16 nations to assemble the outpost; if all goes well, an American-led crew will move in next summer.

As for Mir, the Russians will let the aging outpost burn up in the atmosphere at the end of 1999, 13 years after it was put in orbit.

The shuttle will return home on Friday with Andrew Thomas, who just completed a stay of more than four months aboard the Russian space station. Altogether, seven U.S. astronauts racked up 907 days on Mir.

Discovery separated from Mir after four days of joint flight as the two spacecraft soared 240 miles above Russia.

As a final favor, Discovery's seven crew members aimed cameras and binoculars at Mir from 240 feet away as the cosmonauts pumped a glowing green gas into the Mir laboratory module to help find the holes that resulted from last year's near-catastrophic collision with a cargo ship. The leak test yielded nothing.

"Sure is a pretty view of the station, though," Precourt said. "It's really something."

"Enjoy the view because you're probably the last crew to have a good look at Mir," said Mission Control.

Mir's two cosmonauts waved goodbye from a window as Discovery fired its thrusters and vanished into the black void of space.

Mir served as a testing ground for all sorts of things for NASA. Besides the collision, Americans aboard Mir endured a fierce fire, repeated computer breakdowns, power outages, toxic leaks and sweltering temperatures.

Cable TV, Internet gaining popularity as news sources

Washington, D.C. — A study finds dramatic growth in the newest ways of getting news and resilience in the oldest. Americans are turning increasingly to cable TV and the Internet to get their news but still rely heavily on their local paper, it said.

Despite the multitude of choices, "local television news and daily newspapers remain Americans' favorite news sources," said the Pew Research Center study, released yesterday.

Pew's polling found that cable TV now rivals the networks as a source of information, with six in 10 Americans tuning in for news, weather and sports. By comparison, 57 percent of Americans regularly watch the networks' offerings of nightly newscasts, news magazines and morning shows.

"Americans say they would turn to cable channels first in the event of a big news story," the study said. "And in an era of expanded choices and economic prosperity, big news is what is required to attract big audiences."

The Internet is clearly an up-and-comer. The survey found 20 percent of Americans are going online at least once a week for news, up from 6 percent only two years ago. Yet they are using the Internet to supplement their traditional news sources, not replace them.

"The people who are college-educated, affluent — the people who might fall into the news-junkie category — they absolutely love the Internet," said Dean Mills, dean of journalism at the University of Missouri. "People want basically the same things with news as they've always wanted: dependable, up-to-date information."

George Harmon of Northwestern University's journalism school describes a "colossal gravitation" toward cable news for a major story, such as the death of Princess Diana. The same holds true for the Internet, he said. "Site traffic is extremely heavy on the Web when you've got a blockbuster story."

The study found 38 percent of Americans, largely older women, are regular viewers of the nightly newscasts on the major networks, down from 60 percent in 1993. But television news magazines, such as "60 Minutes," "20/20" and "Dateline NBC" are increasingly popular, especially among younger viewers.

Readership of daily newspapers remains "remarkably stable," the study said. "Americans continue to rely heavily on their daily paper as a primary source of news," with 68 percent reading regularly.

But only 28 percent of people under 30 reported reading a newspaper within a day of the survey, compared with 69 percent of the elderly, "a far more dramatic generation gap than exists for television news consumption," the study said.

Radio news remains a staple for many Americans but the survey found declining interest in call-in political talk shows.

WELFARE AND ABORTION

New Jersey study finds welfare cap boosted state abortion rate

New York — A research study concluded that New Jersey's policy of holding welfare benefits level when recipients have additional children has contributed to an increase in abortions, The New York Times reported Sunday.

And critics of the policy say state officials, who commissioned the report, are now trying to play it down because they don't like the results.

The $1 million study by Rutgers University was commissioned by the state Department of Human Services and the federal Department of Health and Human Services. Researchers were asked to examine the effects of New Jersey's "family cap" which was the first of its kind in the nation when it was enacted in 1992.

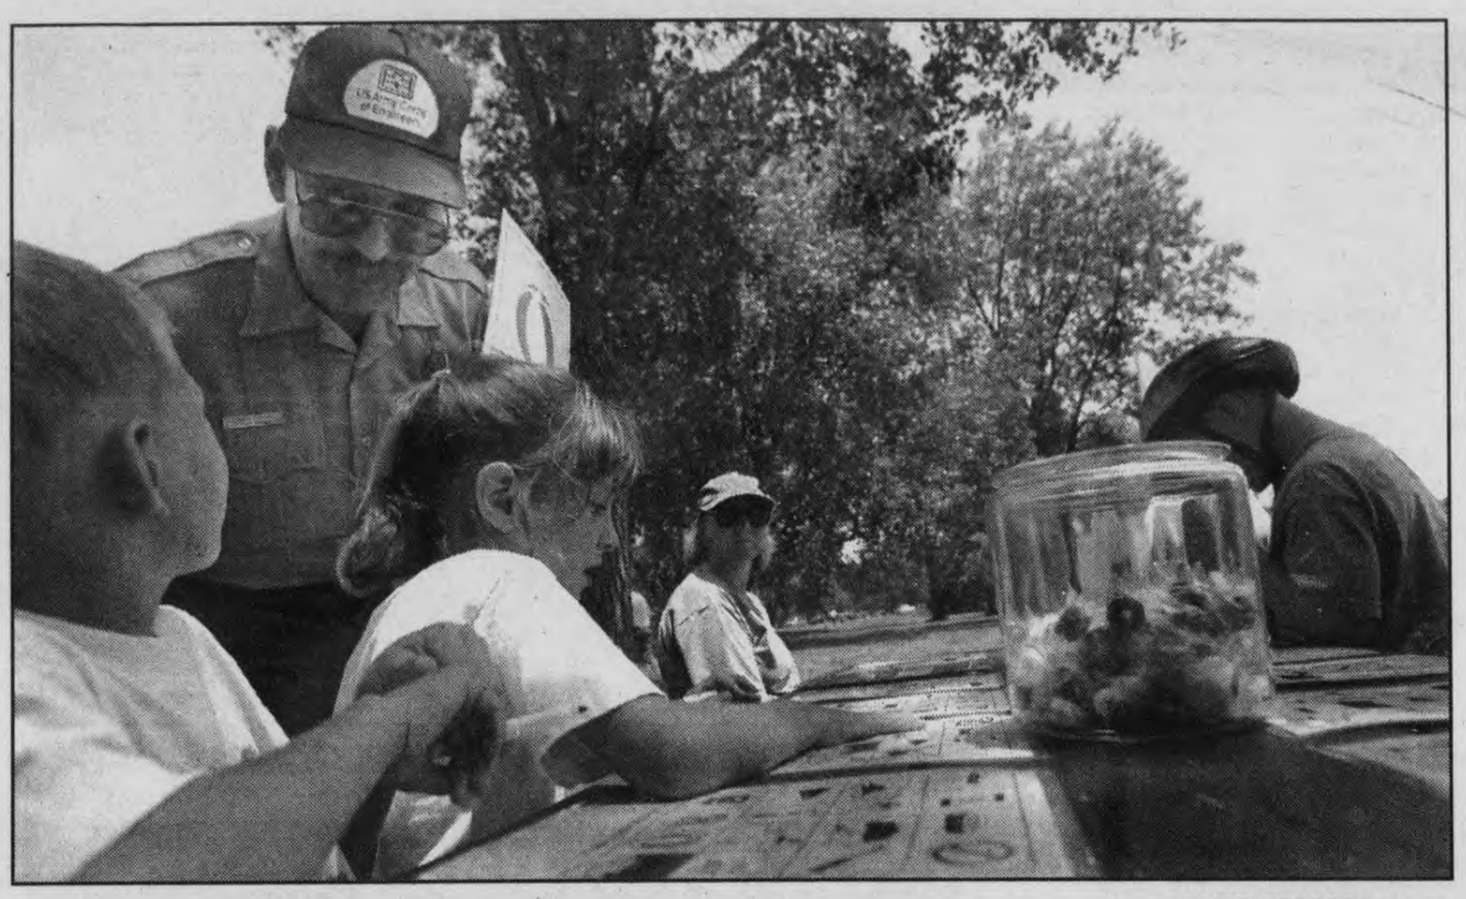
Twenty other states have since instituted family caps similar to New Jersey's, and the Rutgers report is likely to fan the fire of debate over welfare reform.

The December 1997 report, obtained by The New York Times, said the new welfare policy does appear to exert a small but non-trivial effect on abortion rates. The researchers estimated that the number of abortions in the state was about 240 higher per year than it would have been without the welfare change.

State officials have rejected the report's findings, declaring it a "draft," and asking for a revision.

But groups who are challenging the cap in court say the report was not labeled a draft when it was distributed to them in February as part of their preparations for trial.

"We think this is a final report that the state is trying to cover up by saying it's a draft," said Martha Davis, a lawyer with the National Organization for Women's Legal Defense and Education Fund. "And we think the real reason for their objections is concern about what legislators will do if they see the conclusions the Rutgers researchers have drawn."



Davis' group, along with the American Civil Liberties Union of New Jersey and a New Jersey law firm, sued the state last year, charging that the family cap violated the state constitution by interfering with women's reproductive rights and treating children differently depending on their birth status.

Other opponents to the cap include the Roman Catholic Church and conservative Christian groups who feel the cap encourages abortions.

State officials said their concerns are methodological, not political. Looking at the welfare population's behavior before and after the family cap took effect may not make sense because the policy itself may have altered the population, causing some recipients to get off welfare and others to avoid it.

Welfare recipients generally have abortions at a higher rate than other women.

EXPO

Creek with her family camping but came out on Saturday for the Expo.

"We came out so the kids can learn more about water safety and just to make them more aware. It is a good event; it is unfortunate that this might be the last year," she said.

The low turnout at the Expo might have also been due to a lack of awareness about the event.

"I know that advertising is expensive, but that might help awareness and get more people out," Dougan said.

The main worry about the loss of this event is that the public's awareness and knowledge of water and boating safety will go down and more accidents will occur.

"We average less than one drowning a year. Like we said when we started this event though, if this event can prevent one drowning, then this event is needed. Events like this are a way to reduce those figures," Prockish said.

Royals beat Brewers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Darrin Jackson gambled and the Milwaukee Brewers lost.

"Unbelievable," Milwaukee manager Phil Garner mumbled after Jackson was nailed while trying to score from second on an infield single for the last out in Kansas City's 8-7 victory Monday night.

"We were going to win the ball game. I just thought we would win it," Garner said.

The Brewers, fighting from behind all night, had Jackson at second base with two out when Jose Valentin hit a sharp grounder to the right of first baseman Jeff King, who dived and knocked the ball down.

King bobbled the ball once, then twice, and didn't even try to flip to Jeff Montgomery covering the bag. Then Jackson, after hesitating at third, tried to dart home with the tying run but King recovered and threw to catcher Sal Fasano.

Jackson was an easy out, and the Royals had broken a four-game home losing streak while handing the Brewers their sixth-straight road loss.

"When he bobbled it, (third base coach Joel Youngblood) told me to go," said Jackson.

"He bobbled it again and he told me to me to stay, but it was too late. I felt like I was lost. It was a terrible time for it to happen."

more than $32,000 for the Habitat house since September.

Pi Beta Phi members Lindsey de la Torre and Amy Jackson said they were watching the Oprah Winfrey Show last fall when she launched the Oprah Angel Network, which challenged viewers to build a goal of 205 houses with the Habitat for Humanity.

Jackson and de la Torre said they were really inspired and motivated to help.

"We like to make it a point for everybody to do something to help. We looked at each other and said 'let's do it,'" de la Torre said.

The Pi Beta Phi sorority raised more than $2,000 through an All Greek Miss-A-Meal, where participating sororities and fraternities donated money to the cause they would normally use to pay for one night's dinner.

The sorority also collected money through a joint philanthropy with the Theta Xi fraternity. Participating sororities, fraternities and other organizations donated money to the Miracle Mile in the form of quarters. The quarters were laid out across campus during the All-University Open House in April.

A benefit concert was at Lucky Brewgrille in Aggieville featuring the bands Nyd and Sharky's Band.

Alumnae of the Pi Beta Phi sorority also donated money to the Habitat for Humanity cause.

"We put a lot of hours into it, but it's been well worth it," de la Torre said.

LOCK N' LOAD

Heston elected President of NRA

Philadelphia — Two days after assailing President Clinton's character and views on guns, Charlton Heston was elected Monday the new president of the National Rifle Association.

Heston, now serving as the group's first vice president, was chosen president of the 2.8 million-member group at a meeting of the board of directors.

The actor, who played larger-than-life movie characters, said he will work to improve the image of the embattled organization.

"I think it's a question of restoring the image the NRA has enjoyed for 120-some years," he said. "I think we'll find ourselves back in the mainstream of American life."

Heston will help show that the NRA is made up of a decent, law-abiding people, said Wayne LaPierre, who was re-elected the NRA's executive vice president.

"We have been demonized by the media and this is a way to say, 'Hey, Moses is on our side,'" LaPierre said.

The meeting was briefly delayed when NRA security guards had a confrontation with a board member's husband who made a complaint about the organization's bylaws. Guards told Ken Brodbeck, 39, of Des Moines, husband of board member Sally Drew Brodbeck, to be quiet and stop videotaping the session after he was called out of order.

The "next thing I knew they tackled me onto the ground," he said afterward. Security officials maintained Brodbeck fell. The precise nature of his complaint wasn't immediately clear.

At the group's convention over the weekend, Heston urged members to close ranks to fight gun-control advocates.

"Get together," he said, "or get out of the way."

His campaign has not been without opposition.

Neal Knox, a board member who lost the first vice presidency to Heston last year, has been quarreling with the leadership for two decades, and this year is no different.

"All we are trying to do is protect the rights of members," Knox said.

LaPierre condemned Knox's remarks.

"To attack and malign Charlton Heston is unforgivable," he said. "This man has done more for our cause in one appearance than you will do in a lifetime."

In comments Saturday, Heston attacked the media and politicians, accusing them of opposing Second Amendment rights. He had particularly harsh words for Clinton.

"Mr. Clinton, sir, America didn't trust you with our health-care system. America didn't trust you with gays in the military. America doesn't trust you with our 21-year-old daughters, and we sure, Lord, don't trust you with our guns," Heston said.

Heston and LaPierre want to broaden the NRA membership and bring back supporters of sports shooting who were scared away by more extreme members.

STAR MAPS

Largest-ever survey of the heavens about to start

San Diego — The most ambitious mapping of the heavens ever undertaken is about to start from a remote observatory in New Mexico, using the most complex camera ever built.

The $77 million project, called the Sloan Digital Sky Survey, will probe 40 times farther into the universe than any earlier survey, taking pictures in three dimensions and in five colors, astronomers announced here Monday.

When the survey is complete, it will provide an atlas of the skies 100 times clearer than the star charts relied upon for decades and will have pinpojnted the location of more than 100 million galaxies.

Yet, the survey will produce images that anyone will be able to view on a computer. One day, say the astronomers, schoolchildren will be able to display on their computers the same images experts use to study the heavens.

"This is not just a telescope," said Jim Crocker of Johns Hopkins University, one of nine organizations participating in the project. "This is a science factory."

Members of the project team unfurled a 35-foot-long photo swatch of the heavens taken during the project's "first light," the initial pictures taken by a new telescope. The photo contained thousands upon thousands of stellar objects in different colors.

"What you see is 1 percent of one second of data from this instrument," said Bruce Margon of the University of Washington, the science director of the project. He said that by the time the survey is finished, it will have collected 10 terabytes (10 followed by 13 zeros) of data. The amount of data will equal what is now stored in the Library of Congress.

The goal is to completely map, in three dimensions, more than half of the heavens, cataloging 100 million of the brightest galaxies and 100,000 quasars. From its location at Apache Point, N.M., north of White Sands, the telescope cannot see some of the sky over the Southern Hemisphere.

For the galaxy catalog, the telescope will be able to detect objects out to 2 billion light-years. For quasars, the most energetic objects in the universe, the telescope will see out to 10 billion light-years. A light-year is the distance travels in one year, or about 6 trillion miles.

"For quasars, we get to the very end (of the universe), as deep as the Hubble" Space Telescope, said Neta Bahcall, a Princeton astronomer and a member of the survey team.

The 2.5-meter telescope is teamed with a digital camera that Mike Turner of Fermilab, one of the sponsoring institutions, called "the most complicated camera ever built."

The camera includes 54 light amplifiers and is able to gather more pixels of light than the human eye. In contrast to digital cameras that capture images on tiny chips of silicon, the camera includes a full square foot of silicone.

Nutrition Notes

Summer is the perfect time to enjoy fresh fruits and vegetables. If you don't have a garden of your own, scout out the farmer's market or the produce section of your supermarket. Why not try a new fruit or veggie each week? How about mango or kiwi? Or swap your usual carrot sticks for some crunchy jicama.

POWER OUT

Outage forces RCPD to use backup power

The Riley County Police Department was running on backup power from about 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday afternoon.

A fluctuation in the KPL Gas Service power supply to the RCPD caused the emergency generator to kick on, just like it should.

Operating on backup emergency generators is uncommon for the RCPD.

"It is only the second time I know of in 16 years," Brad Schoen, RCPD, said.

The emergency generator operates on a timer so that when the main power has been back on for a certain amount of time, the emergency generator turns off. The problem was the generator didn't turn off, Capt. Schoen said.

The RCPD operated all vital systems on backup emergency generators while KPL fixed the problem with the primary emergency generator. RCPD had to operate on backup emergency power because the primary emergency generator could not be worked on while the main power was on.

Vital systems include emergency operations center, communication systems, dispatch and vital components of the computer system. Non-vital systems include administrative phone lines, data entry and clerical work.

CHIEF WARRANT OFFICER 3 Richard Nowland, left, pilot in command; Sgt. Duane Landry, medic; Chief Warrant Officer 3 Todd Clark, pilot; and Spc. Joe Garner, crew chief, are the four soldiers from Fort Riley who aided in rescuing a man involved in the elevator explosion in Haysville, Kan. on Monday morning. The four flew from Fort Riley and helped rescue the man with the help of a "jungle penetrator," which Garner is holding. The jungle penetrator is used to lower a medic from the helicopter to a trapped individual allowing the individual and the medic to be hoisted back up into the helicopter.

ROUTINE HEROISM

Emergency rescues part of regular duty for Fort Riley pilots

Brian Crisp
Kansas State Collegian

Being a hero can be a tough job, but it's all in a day's work for members of the 82nd Medical Company.

The four-member crew was responsible for the rescue of a man trapped on top of the DeBruce Grain Company elevator that exploded in Haysville, Kan. on Monday. The crew members said the rescue mission was routine, despite the circumstances.

"It was as routine as it can get. Nobody wants to believe that, but it was. It was 40 feet down to the grain elevator with no wind. It went by the book," said Spc. Joe Garner, crew chief for the mission. Garner was in charge of operating the hoist that lifted the injured victim off the elevator.

Sgt. Duane Landry, medic, said the victim was covered with dust and grime, but otherwise in good condition.

Landry said he was lowered onto the roof of the elevator and reached the man, who didn't understand what Landry was saying. Apparently, the man's eardrums had been either damaged or completely blown out by the blast, Landry said. Landry secured the victim, who was then lifted to safety. Landry was left on the building for a short time.

"When the building started shaking, I got kind of nervous." Landry said.

Landry said the building was damaged severely.

"When I got on top of the building, I was able to see down inside and I could see that the building suffered severe structural damage. There were holes everywhere in the concrete," he said.

"Initially, when we landed at Mid-Continent Airport to pick up a radio and then we headed out to the site, we could see the smoke coming out of the center portion of the grain elevator," Chief Warrant Officer Richard Nowland, pilot in command, said.

Nowland said Fort Riley is the only facility besides the National Guard in Topeka that has helicopters equipped to perform such a rescue.

"First, we were briefed by fire and rescue personnel, and then we took off and flew a recon pattern to determine the winds and the condition of the building," Nowland said.

Next, the victim was lifted off the building with the aid of the "jungle penetrator." The crew said the device got its name from the Vietnam War. The device was engineered to penetrate the jungle canopy without being caught by branches.

Because the building was unstable, the crew said there were concerns that the forces and vibrations from the propeller could be a hazard. Some of the victims had to be removed with the aid of a crane.

The reoccurring engine trouble that the helicopters had been experiencing also was a concern, Maj. Moon Mullins, company commander, said. The problems forced the pilots to operate the helicopters under restrictions, so the engines wouldn't be overstressed. Because of the problems with the UH1 Victor, or Huey, rescue missions must now be authorized by the commanding general.

"Right now we're not doing routine mass-missions, but in a case like this Fort Riley takes its responsibility as a good neighbor very seriously," Mullins said. "Historically, I think that every crew member in this unit has done more difficult missions than this that don't get the recognition," Chief Warrant Officer Todd Clark, pilot, said. "We just happen to be the four guys that got sent down there. It was pretty routine."

Union begins renovation

▶ FIRE PROTECTION, COMPLIANCE WITH AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT FIRST ON THE LIST OF IMPROVEMENTS.

Angela Kistner
Kansas State Collegian

Renovation of the K-State Student Union has begun — one year after the original summer 1997 start date. The $11.5 million project is scheduled to be finished by June 2000.

Union Director Bernard Pitts said construction workers are beginning to excavate trenches underneath the building to install stand pipes in the stairwells for better fire protection.

More info?
Keep up with the K-State Student Union renovation project on the Union's Web site at www.union.ksu.edu. Information will also be available through signs posted in the Union. Check out the Editorial Board on page 5 for our view.

He said this will allow firefighters to connect hoses to stand pipes inside instead of hydrants outside.

"The result of all that is the building will be better protected and when the project is over, it will be a much safer building," Dave Abner, building engineer, said.

When students return in the fall, they won't be able to see a lot of differences, Pitts said.

"What's happening in the fall is all the behind-the-scenes stuff, not the glamour stuff," he said.

He said some noticeable changes would be a wheelchair ramp to the bowling alley and new petitions between the second-floor ballrooms. Pitts said those changes should be done by fall.

> "We're going to keep it business as usual and try and accommodate everyone as best we can."
> JACK CONNAUGHTON
> associate Union director

The ramp to the recreation area complies with Americans with Disabilities Act regulations. An elevator in the Union bookstore and better access to Forum Hall are also ADA improvements planned as part of the renovation.

Pitts said the Union is getting new ballroom petitions because current petitions are not soundproof. This limits how many events can be scheduled in the ballroom at the same time. Pitts said he hopes the new petitions will accommodate multiple events.

"They will certainly have a better eye appeal," he said.

Though summer students might not be inconvenienced by Union construction, the project eventually will involve many key areas of the building. Jack Connaughton, associate Union director, said the entrances might be the biggest change for returning students in the fall. The south entrance might be closed.

"Hopefully, there will be adequate signage to direct," he said.

Abe Fattaey, associate director of facilities planning, said the food-service area will not be affected until April 1999.

Pitts said students don't need to worry about bookstore inconveniences when they return in the fall. He said that at the beginning of the semester and during book buy back, the Union will try to accommodate the students as best it can.

Despite construction, the Union will remain open, Connaughton said.

"We're going to work with the customers very closely," he said.

Connaughton said clubs and organizations still will be able to use Union rooms for meetings. He said there will be weekly meetings to determine how many meetings the Union can accommodate. Some meetings may be moved to other buildings.

"We're going to get creative on this one for the next two years," he said. "We're going to keep it business as usual and try and accommodate everyone as best as we can."

Connaughton said any room requests that come in now are marked tentative.

The Union won't be closed, but there will be loud noises and disruptions that students will have to deal with, Pitts said.

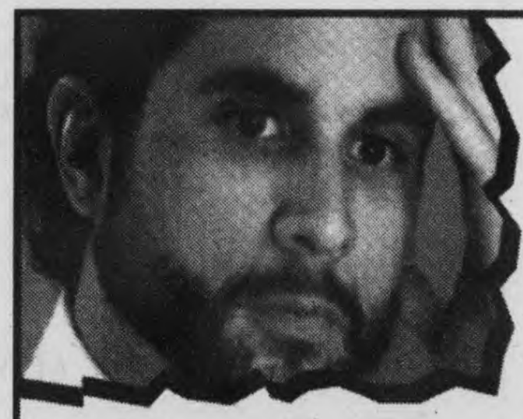
"The clientele that uses the facility need to be flexible," he said.

There will be construction sites petitioned off, and only authorized personnel will be allowed in, Pitts said. But, he said they may put windows in the sites to meet people's curiosity so they can see what's happening.

Pitts said the Union has a constantly updated Web site and quarterly newsletters to keep everyone informed of current construction. He said it also will buy ad space outlining what's currently happening.

"The key is communication," he said.

If people know about inconveniences in advance, they will be able to accommodate them better, Pitts said.



Pitts said he hopes the 20-year bond, paid by student privilege fees, will be paid in less than 20 years.

"There is potential for it with the demographics of the state suggesting our enrollment will increase," he said.

Salmonella cases linked to cereal

Angela Kistner
Kansas State Collegian

Cases of salmonella serotype Agona have been reported in 11 states between April and May 1998. As of June 5, four cases have been reported in Kansas.

Millville brand Toasted Oats cereal, sold by ALDI supermarkets, has been connected with the cases.

Philip Whitfield, ALDI Inc. spokesman, said that on May 30 ALDI received a phone call from the Food and Drug Administration. The FDA said it was conducting an investigation at the plant where Toasted Oats is made for about 40 grocery chains.

Whitfield said the FDA didn't give ALDI any reason for the investigation, but ALDI voluntarily removed the plain Toasted Oats from the shelves.

ALDI also removed two other types of Toasted Oats — cinnamon apple and honey nut — even though they weren't part of the investigation.

"We realized there might be confusion with the customer," Whitfield said. "We told the managers to take off all Toasted Oats cereal from the shelves."

Whitfield said ALDI also told the news media to inform customers to return any Millville brand Toasted Oats for a full refund.

ALDI has identified another supplier, and Whitfield said he hoped all three Toasted Oats products are back on the shelves early next week.

Whitfield said customers should call (800) 743-3029 if they have any questions.

Greg Crawford, spokesman for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said the salmonella cases have been reported in northeast and south-central Kansas.

Crawford said Millville brand Toasted Oats is the only cereal connected with the salmonella cases. But, Malt-O-Meal, which produces Millville brand Toasted Oats, has recalled other products.

"Other cereals may be pulled based on actions by Malt-O-Meal," he said.

Dennis Gaschler, Dillons spokesman, said it did remove two cereals from its shelves Friday as a precaution.

"No Dillons store has any of the product that is linked to the salmonella illness," he said.

The cereals removed were Food Club Toasted Oats in the 15-ounce box and Malt-O-Meal Toasty O's 10-ounce bag.

The symptoms of salmonella are diarrhea, fever and abdominal cramps. These occur 12 to 72 hours after infection and usually last 4 to 7 days.

If consumers have these symptoms, they should see a family physician, Crawford said.

And, if they have Millville brand Toasted Oats, they should take it back to the store where they bought it, he said.

Contamination cause investigated

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — Investigators will study more samples of toasted-oat cereal made by Malt-O-Meal Inc. after tests confirmed that an unusual strain of salmonella was found in unopened boxes, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration said Tuesday.

The company voluntarily recalled up to 3 million pounds of its plain toasted-oat cereal Friday after the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that some of the company's toasted-oat cereal was the likely source in 188 cases of food poisoning.

FDA technicians took samples from 15 unopened boxes of Millville brand cereal, combined them into a composite sample and tested for the Agona strain of salmonella, FDA spokesman Don Aird said Tuesday. The positive results that came back Monday indicated the contamination happened at the plant.

The FDA also found the bacteria in one opened box of Millville cereal from a customer, Aird said.

The agency still is working with the company to find out how the cereal was contaminated and is collecting the product from around the country.

"We're going to continue to look for other products with the same problem," Aird said.

The Millville brand was the first Malt-O-Meal-produced cereal to be suspected of causing illness in 188 people in 11 states.

The cases were reported in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Missouri, New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Iowa, Kansas, Wisconsin and West Virginia. Minnesota health officials said they believe six cases here also might be linked to the cereal.

Grocers were asked to pull Malt-O-Meal brand plain Toasty-Os and Toasted Oats, and plain toasted-oat cereals sold under 38 other brand names, from their shelves Friday.

Meanwhile, a lawsuit was filed Monday by the Minneapolis law firm Zimmerman Reed on behalf of Michael Salloway of Tonka Bay and anyone else who became ill or died from eating the cereals. No deaths have been reported.

The suit accuses Minneapolis-based Malt-O-Meal of violating laws on the safe and sanitary manufacture of food, negligence, breach of implied warranties, and distributing food unfit for human consumption.

Officials of Malt-O-Meal declined comment on the suit.

An oven that broke down at a Malt-O-Meal plant is being looked at as a possible culprit, company president John Lettmann said Sunday. The line has since been shut down during the investigation, and the plant is being inspected.

BAD CHICKEN

Tyson recalls 160,000 pounds of chicken supplied to Wendy's

New Orleans — Tyson Foods recalled 160,000 pounds of chicken supplied to Wendy's restaurants — mostly in the Southeast and the Midwest — after three customers found bits of metal in their food.

The recall took place on Saturday and involved breast fillets and chicken nuggets.

Two customers in Minnesota and one in New York found metal in their sandwiches and nuggets on Friday, said Ed Nicholson, a Tyson spokesman at headquarters in Springdale, Ark. No injuries were reported.

The metal was apparently wire mesh from a conveyor belt, Nicholson said.

The affected Wendy's restaurants are being resupplied and all should be selling chicken again today.

"It's several scattered markets, primarily in the Southeast and Midwest," said Rebecca Lusk, a spokeswoman at Wendy's International Inc. in Dublin, Ohio.

She said she did not know which cities or states were affected.

ALL THE NUDES THAT'S FIT TO PRINT

Police scold 2 newspapers about nude photographs

Tokyo — Accusing Japan's ribald tabloids of going too far, police said Tuesday they issued warnings to two newspapers for publishing pornographic photos.

The warnings, made separately in recent months, were the first in decades in which police took exception to material published in Japan's often-risqué daily tabloids.

On March 9, Tokyo Sports published a photo downloaded from the Internet showing female nudes that — according to police — were insufficiently blurry.

Two months later, Nikkan Gendai printed a color photo of a couple having sex — again, only slightly blurry.

Neither paper will be charged with any crime because both publishers pledged not to release such photographs again, the Tokyo police said.

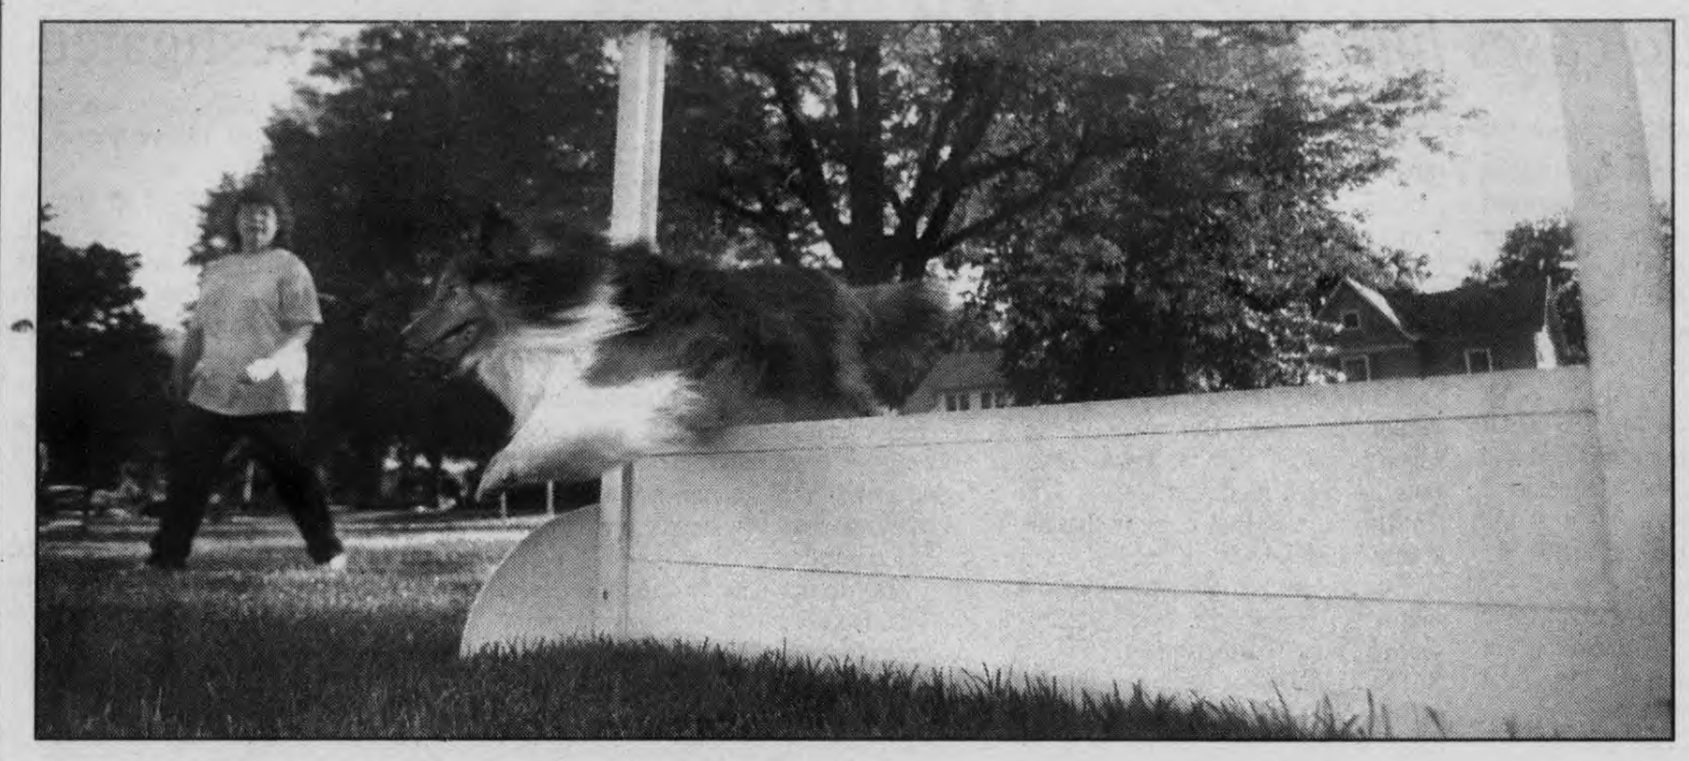
"But we will not stop publishing sex-related materials," said Yasuo Sakurai, chief editor of Tokyo Sports. "Sex is a universal interest of human beings, and we believe many readers like to read what we publish."

Estranged wife says actor is in failing health

New York — Dudley Moore's estranged wife told a tabloid TV show that the comic is in failing health, and she is dropping her $10 million lawsuit against him because of his condition.

"He said he was waiting to die. There was really nothing left for him here," Nicole Rothschild told "Extra." Rothschild refused to identify the illness but said the actor had put on weight and could not laugh.

Michelle Bega, a spokeswoman for the 63-year-old star of "Arthur" and "10," had no comment Tuesday.



The couple have been involved in a bitter divorce, during which Rothschild filed a lawsuit alleging abuse by Moore. But she told "Extra" she is dropping the lawsuit and will take whatever settlement he offers.

"I don't want to be the reason he goes over the edge," she said.

Moore underwent heart surgery in September because of a blocked artery.

The couple have a 2-year-old son.

Museum to exhibit traditional African art

Lynette Abitz
Kansas State Collegian

Kansans will view traditional African art when they visit the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art this summer. The museum opened the exhibit "Of Matter and Spirit: African Art from Kansas Museums" on Tuesday. It will run until Aug. 2.

The exhibit is offered by the Kansas Reciprocal Art Touring Exhibit Service, which is administered by the Salina Art Center. Reinhild K. Janzen, professor of art history at Washburn University, is curator of the exhibit.

"Of Matter and Spirit" features textiles, masks and other useful objects such as calabashes, headrests and counterweights. The pieces were collected by various Kansans and eventually made it into Kansas museums.

Katherine Walker Schlageck, art educator at the Beach museum, said Africans do not consider their pieces to be art.

"They didn't create art. All of these objects were made to be used," she said

Counterweights, designed as animals or humans, were used to measure gold and also symbolized parables. Other pieces were used in ceremonies.

"They believed each one of these masks are living objects, and spirits live inside them," Walker Schlageck said.

More info

If you would like to be a model in the fashion show or want more information about the exhibit, contact Katherine Walker Schlageck at 532-7718.

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is open Tuesday through Friday 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and until 8:30 p.m. on Thursdays. It is open Saturday and Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m. Admission is free.

While we might see the African culture as different from ours, Schlageck said we tend to forget both cultures are agriculturally based. One example is the chi wara head, which is part of the museum's collection. The stylized antelope headdress was made in male and female versions. The women wore the headdresses and would poke holes in the earth with sewing sticks.

"They were putting the spirit of fertility in the soil," Walker Schlageck said.

The museum has planned various activities in conjunction with the exhibit. African storytelling, lectures and a fashion show are just a few.

"It's a chance for us to do something for the community," she said.

La Barbara James Wigfall, associate professor of landscape architecture, was a member of the focus group that assisted in planning the programs. She is also a collector of African art. She said she would like the exhibit to educate the community.

"We want to expose people to something that they've never thought about or seen, and make them aware of it as a legitimate body of work," she said.

Pauline Okot-Kotber, who runs the Ethnique Boutique & Braids Parlor in Aggieville, is in charge of the African textile fashion show July 18. She said she hopes the exhibit will make the community aware of the importance of African art.

"I'm hoping they will like the art and want it in a room in their homes," Okot-Kotber said.

Union renovations mark positive campus improvements

A year after the scheduled start date, K-State Student Union renovations have begun.

Students have been paying the privilege fees for the Union enhancement since 1994, now three years later, the hammering and digging has finally started.

Long after the dust has cleared students will still be paying — this is a 20-year bond. It is understandable after the delays and confusion that everyone involved is cynical about the timetable set up, but let's look at the positive side to all this.

It is positive to see the Union planners are concerned with preserving our investment. Trenches are being dug beneath the building to ensure better fire protection through the use of stand pipes instead of the hydrants outside.

It is positive to see the renovations include making sure the recreation and other areas comply with Americans with Disabilities Act regulations. Everyone should be able to use and enjoy the many different services in the Union. It is positive to see that student needs were thought of during the planning.

The 24-hour convenience store will be especially beneficial for students who have studio or other students who have to work late at night in campus buildings.

But as positive as the renovation is, it will be an inconvenience. There will be noise, dust and construction workers everywhere. Parts of the Union will be closed and relocated, and meetings will have to be rescheduled.

These are the costs of remodeling. Anyone who has ever lived through the remodeling of a home knows some things go as planned and some things don't.

In the coming months when we are all frustrated with construction, let's hope we all remember the good things that will be there when the dust clears.

GIMME SOMETHING TO BELIEVE

Comparing recent riots to riots of the '60s is foolish and wrong.

We all need something in which to believe, I guess.

Religion, sports, business, Hostess products — as human beings, we always are seeking that one thing that gives us all a purpose, that one thing that makes it all worth it.

ERIC GOOLD

In the 1960s, of course, causes worth believing in were rampant — equal rights for women and minorities, ending the Vietnam War, learning to defy authority, planting the flag on the moon. All of these events were landmarks in the evolution of America as a culture and as a society, and fighting for them gave people that something in which to believe.

Fast forward to the '90s. As college students, what do we believe? The college campus, site of historic protests and bastion of societal change in the '60s, is once again the focal point for riots and mass protests by students.

What has caused these riots? What significant issue has been declared of such importance that '90s students find it necessary to start fires and clash with police? Are we protesting for, say, equal medical treatment for AIDS patients without medical insurance? No. Are we rioting because Republicans are threatening to make subsidized student loans a thing of the past? No.

We are fighting for the right to booze, baby.

According to USA Today, in the article "College students intoxicated on spirit of protest," protests erupted on at least five significant campuses last semester: Michigan State University, Washington State University, Ohio University, University of Connecticut, and Plymouth (N.H.) State College. While the exact circumstances were slightly different, in each case, the main cause for rioting had something to do with alcohol.

At Michigan State, students rioted because they no longer were allowed to drink at a field before football games. At Ohio, students rioted when the bars closed early because of daylight-saving time. At the University of Colorado, where I went as an undergraduate, a fraternity party once got out of hand and ended up shutting down an entire business district in Boulder.

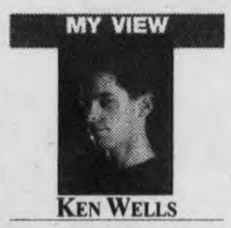
Don't get me wrong: I am all for alcohol. I've been known to drink more than my fair share of my favorite malt beverage on any number of occasions. What I don't understand is the necessity for violence. When I get drunk, I go to bed and pass out — I don't set things on fire and look for a representative of the law to harass.

What I found to be funny was the reaction of various pundits and administrators to all of these riots. They all went on Ted Koppel's show and looked for something on which to place the blame: binge drinking, lack of clear alcohol policies at universities, the need for students to "blow off steam."

While I found all of these responses to be tiresome and irritating, there is one thing they said with which I do agree: it is ironic and sad that the spirit of protest that was radically effective in the '60s has turned into these lame riots in the '90s. Anyone who thinks that getting drunk and burning a couch can be compared favorably to marching for world peace is at the least delusional and at the most downright wrong.

I just hope alcohol isn't something in which we believe. I hope that college students put their faith in something other than a bottle.

The truth is, alcohol always will be on college campuses. And it should be — some of my greatest memories from college involve drinking. But alcohol doesn't need to be the focus of any spiritual life, nor should it be the expression of political angst.



If the bars close early, go home and drink. If you can't drink next to the football stadium, go to the baseball diamond. Don't destroy anything, and if you feel like starting a riot, make it mean something more than getting wasted.

Look for a cause worth believing in.

Leagues should enforce penalties for fighting

Just when you thought the Kansas City Royals couldn't sink any lower, they dig deep inside themselves to keep on diving.

What began as an innocent if inept outing by the Royals against the Anaheim Angels turned into another textbook example of the aberrant mentality of all too many professional athletes.

KEN WELLS

One bad pitch led to a series of fastballs thrown directly at opposing batters, and benches emptied in a watered-down version of a recent tussle on a New York diamond. But nobody got hurt, so it's not a big deal.

How many times did you see footage of either of these fights? Probably more times than you saw Mark McGwire's latest home run (what's he on now — 44,000 or something?). More times than you've seen anything redeemable about America's pastime.

It's disgusting and deplorable, so much so that you will be bombarded with these images until they are ingrained into your consciousness.

Good thing you're not an impressionable child, isn't it?

No illusions have been made about hockey. It's an integrally violent sport, and fights break out more often than overtime games. But this is understood. There are still fines and suspensions for moments of unacceptably uncouth conduct; cheap shots are enforced, but fair fights are tolerated. The referees keep their distance and let the matter carry itself to its natural end, much like a duel, just without the black powder.

And yet the hockey player is characteristically one of professional sports' humblest.

Perhaps a moment of bravado or flash for the media, but when the series ends, they shake hands and give pats on the head with respect. They can skate for over half the game, generally amounting to chasing a small spot of rubber around the rink, usually not scoring. Personal stats rarely enter into their mindset.

The violence they experience is part and parcel of their job description; it's an expected artifact of the hockey heritage.

Basketball players, to be fair, push themselves up the court with equal enthusiasm, and body contact is more or less inevitable with limbs bouncing off each other under the rim. But the sport's rhetoric is now laced with vitriol, players marking their territory with spit and ego.

Baseball, to be honest, lost me the year when October came and went without a World Series. Players paid too much to do what should be a job were getting antsy when denied their sums by the megalomaniacs willing to pay them king's ransoms in the first place.

We see these images of the brawls and can filter them out as aberrant behavior. Children, especially those participating in sports leagues of their own, sometimes cannot, and are vulnerable if bombarded with such stimuli. And saturation is what the news media are all about. The leagues need to realize that with their salaries, America's athletes will always be role models to one extent or another and they will be emulated.

Until the leagues decide to send the right message by stiff, harsh discipline, much greater than the fiscal slaps-on-the-wrist being levied by front offices today, they will be looking the other way.

It's imperative that we make sure children don't follow the punks who get the air time, but those athletes who embody modern sportsmanship.

DESTINATION: TAMPA BAY

Wildcat signed by Devil Rays

Former K-State third-baseman Josh Marn signed a free-agent contract with the Tampa Bay Devil Rays on Monday, university officials said.

Three other members of the 1998 Wildcats were selected in the amateur draft last week. Mickey Blount, a pitcher, was taken in the fifth round by Minnesota. Pat Hertzel, also a pitcher, was chosen by Tampa Bay in the 14th round, and catcher Yancy Ayres was picked by the Kansas City Royals in the 27th round.

Mother is sued over her sexually active son

Lincoln, Neb. — In what might be the first case of its kind in the nation, the parents of a 16-year-old girl who became pregnant by her high school sweetheart are suing the boy's mother, alleging the woman knew the teen-agers were having sex and did nothing to stop it.

Leanne Detmer became pregnant four months after she and 16-year-old Dallas Mills started dating. She later got an abortion. The Detmers said their daughter suffered extensive psychological and physical damage.

In a pretrial ruling, state District Judge Jeffre Cheuvront said the teens had sex 15 to 20 times at various locations, including the girl's home, the boy's home and the home of a friend. The judge said the sex was consensual, so he dropped the boy from the lawsuit, but he ruled that questions about the mother's responsibility should be decided at a trial.

"The issue is whether she had a duty to act," the judge ruled May 27. "Certainly it is foreseeable that harm can result to a person of tender years who finds herself pregnant."

No trial date has been set, but the case might be heard by a jury in October.

In the lawsuit, filed last August, Doug and Sharon Detmer said they did not know the teens were having sex until their daughter told them she was pregnant in April 1997.

The Detmers are seeking $11,371 in medical expenses, including the cost of the abortions and costs associated with their daughter's depression, plus other, unspecified damages.

ROTC seniors to attend advanced testing camp

Mary Bosco
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's ROTC is sending 14 seniors to Ft. Lewis Washington throughout the months of June, July and August.

The group, containing two females and 12 males, will be attending advanced camp to test everything it has learned the last three years.

Lt. Michelle Snyder said everyone in the ROTC program nationally must attend camp after their junior year in order to become an officer in the army.

"It is five weeks with no breaks," Snyder said. "It is pretty rigorous mentally and physically because you don't always get a lot of sleep."

The cadets are tested on physical training; land navigation; basic rifle marksmanship; squad-situational training exercise; platoon-situational training exercise; nuclear, biological and chemical training; M-60 familiarization and leadership skills.

Snyder said K-State works hard to prepare the students for camp. Throughout their junior year, they focus on squad- and platoon-situational training exercises, put people in leadership positions, work out three days a week and have a drill-training exercise each semester.

"They pretty much drill you all three years to prepare for camp," David Traynham, junior in computer science, said. "They teach you in depth exactly what we will have to know throughout the next five weeks of camp."

Traynham will leave for camp July 11. He said it is the bridge between the area he is in now and the next step that prepares him for future leadership positions.

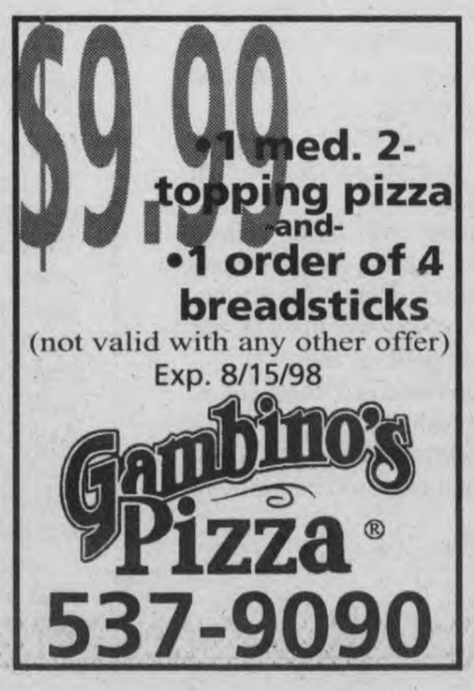
"I'm excited for the learning opportunity, but I'm nervous because it has an effect on my future life," Traynham said.

He said the only aspect of camp he is apprehensive about is interacting with others from across the nation.

"We will be put in groups and squads with people we have never been with or seen before," Traynham said. "They were taught how to do things different than us, but I'm sure it should work its way through fine."

However, Snyder said that when she attended camp the best part was meeting others.

"It is a good experience. It teaches you to work with people you don't know, because you don't get to see any K-State people," she said.



Another summer ROTC event took place May 29 and 30 in Omaha, Neb., at the College World Series. K-State sent four cadets to perform as the color guard during three of the games.

The group also will be one of the organizations to help with the American Cancer Society Walk for Life in the middle of August. Cadets will walk for 24 hours in Memorial Stadium for the fund-raising project.

"I think it is important for ROTC cadets to get out a show the community what we do," Capt. Barry Adams said. "Not a lot of people realize what we do. We have some of the best students in our program, and we like to show them off."

The K-State ROTC group has 110 members, and Adams said it takes students who are interested in becoming military officers and enhances their chances through their college careers.

German railway restores service through scene of rail disaster

Berlin — Rescue workers ended their search Tuesday for remains at the site of last week's high-speed train disaster, and the German railway reopened the Hamburg-Hanover line to rail traffic.

Illustrating just how gruesome the crash was, officials lowered the death toll for a second time — from 98 to 95 — as forensic experts continued to piece body parts together to identify the dead.

Police spokesman Joachim Lindenberg said workers sifting through the last bit of sand found a women's watch and small pieces of flesh before the site was turned over to the railway Tuesday.

"Everything has been scoured that's there to be scoured," Lindenberg said.

An hour later, a regional train from Hamburg passed through at 44 mph — one-third the speed of the InterCity Express that derailed June 3 and slammed into a concrete bridge, crumpling the cars like tin cans.

The effect of the high-speed impact on the victims' bodies has made it difficult for officials to determine exactly how many people died. They now believe 90 people died at the scene; five died in hospitals.

All but one of the 95 victims had been identified, police said.

Meanwhile, the German national railway said it was investigating a newspaper report that it had rejected an internal proposal in 1995 for an electronic monitoring system of the wheels on express trains.

Officials said they believe a broken wheel caused the wreck in the northern village of Eschede, although they have yet to determine what caused it to break.

The mass-market Bild newspaper said the railway rejected the electronic monitors as impractical and unreliable.

Twelve of the 59 original model express trains pulled out of service for safety checks after the crash were back in service Tuesday. Rail officials said so far no defects have been found.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

UPC to sponsor free movies

Mary Bosco
Kansas State Collegian

Students are still in Manhattan during the summer, and the Union Program Council still is providing activities at no cost to keep them occupied.

"The Full Monty" will be showing for free at 7 p.m. Friday in Union Forum Hall.

"The Full Monty," directed by Peter Cattaneo, is about six men needing to make some quick cash.

Robert Carlyle, as Gaz, is an unemployed industrial worker facing loss of his custody rights because he has failed to pay child support. He plans to launch a striptease act with five of his friends — one is overweight; one is hopelessly uptight; one is the sole-employed member of the group; one is a geezer with a dance repertoire including the bump, the bus stop, the stomp and the funky chicken; and one has no sense of rhythm.

Later this summer, UPC will show two more free movies — "The Newton Boys" on June 26 at 7 p.m. and "Primary Colors" on July 17 at 7 p.m.

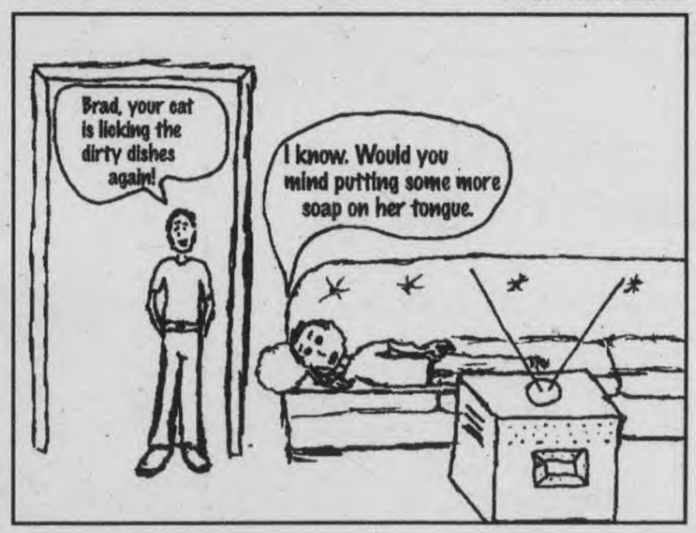
"We tried to look for newer movies," Heide McBride, UPC program adviser, said.

Teto Henderson, UPC program manager, said they were also the three movies that received the most votes among the students involved in summer programming.

"We show free movies in the summer because we get a much better rate on them than during the school year," Henderson said.

"Summer school is going on, so we need to provide students an avenue to relax and take a break from the world of academia."

UPC always has shown movies during the summer and provided courtyard entertainment through the lunch hour.



McBride said courtyard entertainment is mainly for the people roaming around, but it adds to the Union's atmosphere during new-student orientation.

The Full Rundown

"The Full Monty" did well at this year's Academy Awards. The film scored nominations for Best Original Screenplay, Best Picture and Best Director (Peter Cattaneo). "The Full Monty" won the Oscar for Best Musical or Comedy Score.

'ANIMALS' ANGEL'

McCartney leads service for late wife

London — With poetry, a bagpiper and the haunting strains of "Let it Be," former Beatle Paul McCartney paid homage to his wife, Linda, who died of breast cancer in April at age 56.

"After she died, I was thinking of her and I thought of her like a diamond," an emotional McCartney told mourners Monday. "A big orange diamond. And if you look at all the facets of the diamond, as with every facet you looked at, she was greater."

He told the 700 guests at a private memorial service in the historic church of St. Martins-in-the-Fields that he still cannot believe his wife of nearly 30 years is dead.

"But I have to, because it's true," he said.

McCartney said Tuesday a second memorial service would be scheduled for June 22 at New York City's Riverside Church. He said he and the couple's children would attend.

On Monday, mourners in London sang "Let it Be" in tribute to the many talents of the former Linda Eastman of Scarsdale, N.Y.: photographer, vegetarian, animal-rights campaigner, musician, wife and mother.

McCartney penned the hit as a tribute to his mother, who also died of breast cancer when he was 14.

"It was amazing. It was a beautiful hymn," comedian Tracey Ullman said after the service. Celebrity guests included Ringo Starr, George Harrison, as well as Sting, Elton John and film producer David Puttnam.

In adjoining Trafalgar Square, animal-rights activists set up a giant pair of angel's wings for condolence messages and hung banners proclaiming "Linda: The Animals' Angel" in several languages.

Vegetarian children laid flowers beside a large photograph of Linda McCartney cuddling a tiny chick.

Hundreds of people waited for up to seven hours in the rain and wind to pay tribute. A cheer rose when McCartney, 55, arrived at the church with Heather, 36, his wife's daughter by her first marriage, and the couple's children Mary, 27; Stella, 26; and James, 21.

FROM RUSSIA, WITH LOVE

Officials: More than $25 billion smuggled out of Russia

Moscow — More than $25 billion has been smuggled out of Russia illegally since the Soviet collapse, Russian security services said in an estimate released Tuesday.

Most of the money has gone to bank accounts in Switzerland, Cyprus, Britain and Israel, the Interfax news agency reported, citing Russian security services that are investigating capital flight.

Between $25 billion and $27 billion has been smuggled by companies and individuals, usually to evade taxes, Interfax reported.

Investigators said they have leads on $5 billion of the money and are trying to track it down, it said.

Russia's economy has been contracting since the late 1980s and went into a virtual freefall in the first years after the 1991 breakup of the Soviet Union. In 1996, the gross domestic product was estimated at $767 billion.

U.S., North Korea agree to reopen talks

Seoul, South Korea — North Korea agreed Tuesday to reopen a military channel of communications with the U.S.-led U.N. command, a move that could lead to an easing of tensions on the Korean Peninsula.

The agreement will let officers of both sides meet at the border village of Panmunjom to discuss armistice-related issues, the U.S.-led U.N. Command said.

The talks will replace the Korean Military Armistice Commission, which supervised the 1953 armistice that ended fighting in the Korean War.

The commission has been inactive since 1991, when North Korea withdrew because a South Korean general was named as the U.N. command's chief representative on it.

The latest accord came after South Korea agreed to let an American general represent the United Nations.

The Korean War ended without a peace treaty, and the two neighbors technically are still at war. Their border is the world's most heavily armed, with a total of 2 million battle-ready troops.

STORMS

Manhattan emerged bruised and battered after Wednesday night's hail storm.

At 5:35 p.m. Wednesday night, a severe thunderstorm warning was issued by the National Weather Service for the Manhattan area. Hail, heavy rain and lightning were reported along with three quarters of an inch of rain.

"Claflin was flooded, and I saw a car that was flooded up to its window," Kye Hittle, senior in electrical engineering, said.

Along with the flooding came pea-sized hail followed by golf-ball sized hail.

"I've lived in Manhattan my whole life, and I've never seen hail this big before," Tara Lundberg, sophomore in business, said.

Erika Epley, junior in print journalism, was doing homework in her apartment in the Woodway Apartments at the time of the storm.

"It started as pea-size hail, so I ran outside and tried to save my car, but by the time I got there it was too late," Epley said.

Tornado warnings were issued at 7:05 p.m. in St. Mary's and southeast Pottawatomie County.

There were numerous reports of hail, tree and power line damage related to the storm.

OMINOUS CLOUDS HOVER OVER THE KONZA PRAIRIE LATE WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON SOUTH OF MANHATTAN. A STORM DROPPED RAIN AND HAIL OF MANY SIZES ACROSS MANHATTAN.

Little documentary ON THE PRAIRIE

Kansas City-area producers film Konza Prairie for possible PBS show

Scott Aldis-Wilson
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan's own slice of the prairie may be educating the rest of the TV viewing nation by early 2000, if all goes according to Aimee Larrabee and John Altman's plans.

Larrabee and Altman, co-producers for Inland Sea Productions in Kansas City, Mo., are spending their third summer filming in the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area as part of their documentary on the Flint Hills. Their choice of subject, Larrabee said, came from their mutual interest in natural history when they looked at possible topics.

"It just sort of clicked. It was just that simple," Larrabee said.

Due to its shallow rocky soil, the Flint Hills were impossible for early settlers to plow . It was never developed, and the result today is the largest continuous stretch of tallgrass prairie in North America today.

The 8,616-acre area today known as Konza Prairie is made up of tracts purchased by non-profit group Nature Conservancy in 1971 and 1975.

The land has been leased to the K-State Division of Biology. It has been used by several departments to study subjects from controlled prairie fires and bison herds to inspiration for art students.

Konza Prairie is also one of 20 sites throughout North America and Antarctica in the Long Term Ecological Research project, funded by the National Science Foundation.

> "A lot of people have never seen a tallgrass prairie and how it functions. Never seen a prairie fire or bison grazing."
> JOHN BLAIR
> associate professor in biology

Larrabee said the documentary will deal with the science of grasslands using the Konza Prairie as an example.

"We will weave into all that some of the cultural and natural history," Larrabee said.

The finished product will start from the first human inhabitants of the area and continue through the American Indian tribes for whom Konza Prairie is named, the European settlers, the cowboys and end with studies currently conducted on the land with some looks at the future.

Larrabee said 40 hours of footage currently have been shot on Konza Prairie from monthly trips since 1996. Until recently, this footage has been more focused on events, such as the bison roundup and grass fires, than on interviews, she said.

"We felt that on a piece that's this broad, we had to really experience it first," Larrabee said.

Current filming, which she estimates will take another 10 hours of footage, will finish on-camera interviews with approximately 10 to 12 scientists working in Konza Prairie as well as historians.

Larrabee said that filming will continue through fall and early

Peterson, Carlin vie for House seat

▶FORMER MAYOR FILES FOR UPCOMING ELECTION, INCUMBENT UNCONCERNED.

Collegian Staff
Kansas State Collegian

Former Manhattan City Commission member and mayor Sydney Carlin filed at the Secretary of State office Tuesday to run as the Democratic candidate for a seat in the Kansas House of Representatives. The deadline was Wednesday at noon.

CARLIN

"We have long recognized that Sydney is a viable candidate, a knowledgeable candidate, and I liked her attitude of being of service to the community," Martha Gray, Riley County Democratic Chair, said.

Carlin was elected to the City Commission in April 1993 and later served a one-year term as mayor in 1996. Gray said she feels Carlin's constituents have appreciated her efforts in the past as commissioner and mayor.

She said they have every reason to expect continued efforts from Carlin in the House.

Gray also said that Carlin's combination of ability and caring make her a strong candidate for the office.

Jeff Peterson, former K-State student body president and Republican representative for the 66th district, doesn't seem to be concerned about the announcement that he will have an opponent in the general elections.

"That's what the democratic process is all about," Peterson said.

Peterson said he heard about the announcement Monday.

PETERSON

Formerly Peterson was unopposed in the election for the seat that he has occupied for two years.

Neither candidate has an opponent in the primary elections.

Peterson said he had spoken with Carlin who was very enthusiastic about the upcoming race.

"Sydney said she wasn't disappointed with my voting record. She just said that this is something she's ready to do," he said. "I don't plan to change my campaign. I am going to continue to focus on my issues."

K-State Police to stop unlocking students' cars

Angela Kistner
Kansas State Collegian

Before shutting the car door, students need to make sure car keys are in their hands.

The K-State Police will no longer unlock cars for students who have locked keys in their car.

In the past campus police unlocked cars on campus and at fraternities and sororities for free.

Richard Herrman, lieutenant patrol commander for campus police, said they based the decision on economics and liability.

"To equip all our vehicles with the tools needed to open the new modern vehicles and to train the officers was becoming very costly," he said.

> "To equip all our vehicles with the tools needed to open the new modern vehicles and to train the officers was becoming very costly."
> RICHARD HERRMAN
> lieutenant patrol commander, K-State Police

Herrman said the repair of damages caused by opening doors was also costly.

Herrman said the department also doesn't want to be responsible if an air bag is damaged.

Campus police will try to open vehicles in an emergency.

"In the event a child is locked in a vehicle, we will do all we can to get the vehicle open as quickly as possible, but only in dire emergencies," Herrman said.

During fall and spring semester, Herrman said campus police unlocked five to 10 doors a day.

During the summer, it unlocked about two to five a day.

Angie Spilker, Riley County Police Department patrol secretary, said it does not unlock cars either.

"We do it for emergency reasons only," she said.

Spilker said a child or an animal locked inside a car constitutes an emergency.

The only option left for students now, besides trying to unlock the door themselves, is to call a locksmith.

Kevin Knutson, Karsmizki's Locksmith and Alarm office manager, said the cost of a locksmith depends on the car, but usually runs about $25.

Knutson said Manhattan locksmiths' business will probably increase since neither the RCPD or campus police unlock cars now.

"The students are going to have less damage to their vehicles, too, from disconnected linkage and so on," he said.

Celebration commemorates emancipation

Brian R. Crisp
Kansas State Collegian

The 10th annual Juneteenth celebration commemorates the announcement of freedom for slaves held in the Midwest during the Civil War.

"It's a day of cultural focus," Diana Caldwell, Juneteenth community task force, said.

The celebration is Saturday, June 13 and will feature a parade beginning at 10 a.m. The parade will include the historical Mounted Color Guard from Fort Riley and the Marching Cougars from Kansas City, Mo. The parade begins at Long's Park, travels east on Yuma and ends at the Douglas Community Center.

"We've added a parade this year. Typically this is an outdoor celebration, with barbecues, games, arts and crafts. Manhattan's Juneteenth celebration actually began in a couple's backyard, H.B. and Diana Caldwell, in 1989," Sherry Wright, director of communications for USD 383, said.

The celebration begins at 11 a.m. and ends at 5 p.m. Wright said the celebration will include informational booths and vendors selling African-American goods. There will be poetry readings, round-table discussions and essays by local children and adults. In addition, there will be a gospel celebration featuring choirs from local churches, Caldwell said.

Wright said many slaves in Kansas and other central regions of the country did not receive word that they were freed until two years after the Emancipation Proclamation. The Proclamation was given by President Lincoln on Jan. 1, 1863. Slaves in Texas received word of emancipation on June 19, 1865 when Gen. Gordon Granger and 1,800 troops arrived in Galveston, Texas and proclaimed Texas to be under United States authority.

The Juneteenth celebration began the following year in 1866. Celebrations of Juneteenth soon spread across the nation, Wright said.

"This is a good opportunity to acquaint the community with an African-American holiday," Caldwell said.

Cemetery faced with overcrowding, caretaker says

Scott Aldis-Wilson
Kansas State Collegian

The Fort Riley post cemetery is a shrinking piece of American history that may outgrow a place in the present.

Since its establishment in 1853, the cemetery near Lower Brick Row has extended eligibility of burial on post to active and retired soldiers, along with spouses and dependent children.

Today it serves as the final resting place for veterans of the Civil War including seven confederate prisoners of war, both World Wars, Korea, Vietnam and Desert Storm.

Times may have to change, though. In September 1997, the announcement was made that the post cemetery might become inactive within a few years, with only 127 unreserved or unoccupied spaces then available.

Alphonso Jefferson, caretaker for the cemetery, said he has seen this problem on the way for the past two years. Total burials

Pat Robertson cautions gays of punishment through bombs, acts of God

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. — Calling it a message of redemption, religious broadcaster Pat Robertson said one of Florida's biggest cities should beware of hurricanes after allowing "Gay Days" last weekend.

Gay organizations sponsor the annual event in Orlando, Fl., with flags of a rainbow design flying from downtown utility poles.

"I would warn Orlando that you're right in the way of some serious hurricanes, and I don't think I'd be waving those flags in God's face if I were you," Robertson said Monday on "The 700 Club," a Christian Broadcasting Network talk show.

Robertson also said the widespread practice of homosexuality "will bring about terrorist bombs, it'll bring earthquakes, tornadoes and possibly a meteor."

Robertson said his warning "is not a message of hate. This is a message of redemption."

Mitch Rosa, president of Hampton Roads Pride, a regional gay rights group, laughed when he heard of Robertson's remarks.

"I feel sorry for him, I really do," Rosa said. "If he's worried about a hurricane, he should worry first about his own roof."

BILLS FOR PILLS

Wall Street executive gives cash for free Viagra

NEW YORK — It's a gift that could bring joy to a lot of couples.

Wall Street executive Alan Greenberg is donating $1 million to buy Viagra for impotent men who can't afford it, The New York Times said Wednesday.

"I guess you could say I'm kind of into basics," said Greenberg, who declined to say whether he had taken Viagra himself. "And I think it's something that will give a lot of pleasure to a lot of people."

Greenberg, 70, chairman of Bear, Stearns Companies, gave the money to officials at the Hospital for Special Surgery in New York on Tuesday. He said he donated the money after reading that some insurance companies and state health programs were denying patients the impotence drug because of its cost.

Viagra sells for $8 to $10 a pill.

"It's a lot of pills," said John Ahearn, the hospital's co-chief executive. "It's an unusual bequest in this regard."

Hospital officials said they had heard of few other gifts designed to pay for specific drugs, and none for Viagra.

Study: Childhood epilepsy may lead to adult social problems

BOSTON — Children who recover from epileptic seizures may be more likely to have social and educational problems in adulthood, a study said.

The research, conducted in Finland, followed up on 220 children who were treated for seizures between 1961 and 1964. They found that two-thirds had been seizure-free for at least five years.

Among the patients were 99 who had no other neurological problems. The study found these people were twice as likely as others their age to have completed only six years of school. They were about three times more likely to be unemployed, unmarried and childless.

The study, directed by Dr. Matti Sillanpaa of Turku Hospital in Turku, was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Explosion deaths rise to five

Associated Press

HAYSVILLE, Kan. — The death toll in a grain elevator explosion rose to five Wednesday with the discovery of two bodies and the identification of another victim's remains. Crews continued to dig through the cascading grain in hopes of finding one other missing worker alive.

A body was found buried in grain at about 4:30 p.m., said Sedgwick County District Fire Chief Ken Cox. It was in the general area where another body was found earlier Wednesday.

The fifth body was found about 50 feet from where officials believe the men were at the time of the explosion. The body has not been identified.

The search had resumed at mid-afternoon after being temporarily suspended after two rescuers were trapped in grain — one up to his armpits. Neither was injured.

"This is a very dangerous occupation. We can't guarantee they will be safe at all times," Cox said.

About 40 workers at a time were going into the 7-by-7 foot tunnel section where the men were believed to have been working, half at each end.

"We're still in rescue mode," said Phil Kirk, a spokesperson for the Federal Emergency Management Agency. "We're not giving up because there's still hope we can find someone who is still alive."

The blast, apparently caused by a spark that ignited highly explosive grain dust, happened Monday at the DeBruce Grain complex south of Wichita.

Jose Prajedes Ortiz, 24, and Jose Luis Duarte, 41, were killed, and four were trapped. Eleven others were injured, and two of them remained in critical condition.

County Coroner Corrie May said human remains found Tuesday were identified as those of one of the four trapped workers.

Authorities have not identified either of the bodies found Wednesday or the remains. The missing have been identified as Howard Goin, Noel Najera, Victor M. Castaneda and Raymundo Diaz-Vela.

More than 100 people were on the scene Wednesday, some of them members of the Oklahoma City Fire Department who worked on recovery efforts after the 1995 bombing that killed 168 people.

Searchers used super-sensitive listening devices, heat-detecting cameras, tiny video cameras on long poles and trucks that vacuum up grain and debris through hoses.

Snyder confident rules not violated by Murphy

Associated Press

GARDEN CITY, Kan. — Two employees of a car dealership said they sold a car to K-State football player Frank Murphy in March, and were questioned by university and NCAA officials within days.

Murphy bought a 1985 BMW on March 25 for $3,199.50 in cash, said Anthony Michel, sales manager at Southwest Auto Inc.

There were reports last week that Duane Koster, a Garden City, Kan., business man and K-State booster, had given Murphy the use of a car, causing the university to report a possible infraction to the NCAA. Koster has denied the reports, and Murphy has declined to comment.

It would be a violation of NCAA rules for a student-athlete to receive a gift from a booster.

Michel said K-State Athletic Director Max Urick and NCAA executive director of enforcement David Berst also questioned him and salesperson Jim Kerns about the transaction.

Investigators made four trips to Garden City, and even looked at the car, which Murphy returned to the dealership April 24, Michel said.

Michel said Murphy wanted to buy the car but didn't have the money on hand when he first looked at it.

"He told us he was waiting for his mom to wire the money," Michel said, and that Murphy was by himself when he bought the car. "We have that happen all the time. It's not unusual," Michel said.

Kerns said he didn't know Murphy was a K-State football player until investigators arrived asking questions.

Investigators asked whether Koster had any role in the purchase or had any ties with the car dealership and its employees.

Kerns said he doesn't know Koster. Michel said he had worked for Koster as a salesperson from 1986 to 1991.

"I said I worked for him years ago, and that was it," Michel said.

When Murphy returned with the car in April, Michel said Southwest Auto agreed to buy the car back and hold it until the investigation was over.

Murphy had not registered the car when he returned it to the dealership, Michel said.

NCAA director of enforcement Dirk Taite said the NCAA would not discuss a pending investigation.

Urick said last week that K-State learned about a potential rules violation in the spring, conducted an investigation and reported the matter to the NCAA.

Football coach Bill Snyder has said the matter involved a football player "who is in the program and competing." He said the potential infraction did not involve anyone on the coaching staff.

Snyder has said he is confident the university, athletic department and football program will not be penalized.

Annual 3-day country music festival to feature improvements, kickoff party

Kelly Dickson
Kansas State Collegian

The Stampede is only a few weeks away.

Country Stampede, a country music festival at Tuttle Creek State Park, is from Friday, June 26 through Sunday, June 28. In addition to the annual three-day concert, a kickoff party was added this year by Country Stampede officials to start off the festival on Thursday night, June 25.

"The kickoff party was added as a thank you to our patrons who have come out the past two years," said Paige Roesler, sales and marketing director for Country Stampede.

Neal McCoy will perform at the kickoff party. Ticket holders with a three-day Country Stampede pass will be admitted free to the Thursday night party. Without a three-day pass, admission to the kickoff party is $10. Parking will be $5 for the one-night performance.

"Ticket sales are going fine. We are expecting about the same numbers for attendance this year as last year," Roesler said. "There were around 75,000 people there last year."

The concert will held at Tuttle Creek State Park, where more than 1,600 campsites will be available to ticket holders wanting to camp within walking distance of the concert. The state park will start its preparations for the festival soon.

"We haven't started preparing too much yet, but they are supposed to start fencing at the end of the week," Pat Spain, office assistant at Tuttle Creek, said.

Ticket holders can reserve campsites when they order tickets.

Some improvements have been made by the park as a result of problems at last year's Country Stampede.

Water shortages caused the Red Cross tents to be full of people with cases of heat exhaustion and dehydration during the music festival in 1997.

> "TICKET SALES ARE GOING FINE. WE ARE ABOUT THE SAME NUMBERS FOR ATTENDANCE THIS YEAR AS LAST YEAR."
> PAIGE ROESLER, sales and marketing director for Country Stampede

"We have a new well, so we will have an ample supply of water," Spain said. "We have also upgraded the lagoons. Lagoon ponds hold the sewage for the park."

Because of the large amounts of people that will be concentrated in one area, upgrades for the lagoons were done to help protect the park's environment.

The city of Manhattan also has a part in preparing for Stampede.

The Manhattan Convention and Visitors Bureau helps people attending the concert find places to stay and go while they are in Manhattan.

Donna Logback, tourism sales manager, said the bureau will have a booth at the Stampede with visitor's guides that include local restaurants and shopping guides.

"When people call looking for hotel rooms we will help them find one," Logback said.

Southern Baptists say women should 'submit graciously' to husbands

SALT LAKE CITY — Women should "submit graciously" to their husbands' leadership, the nation's largest Protestant faith says in its new statement of beliefs.

Amending its formal outline of beliefs for the first time in 35 years, the Southern Baptist Convention adopted the declaration at its annual meeting Tuesday. The group also elected a new president, who long has been the scourge of the moderate and liberal wings of the church.

"A wife is to submit graciously to the servant leadership of her husband, even as the church willingly submits to the headship of Christ," reads the new 18th Article of the Baptist Faith and Message.

While husband and wife are of equal worth before God, according to the article, a husband should provide for, protect and lead the family.

A wife has "the God-given responsibility to respect her husband and to serve as his 'helper' in managing their household and nurturing the next generation."

Herb Hollinger, a vice president on the church's executive committee, said today the article is not binding on Baptists. "It's not being forced on anybody. This article is a compilation statement of the beliefs held by most Baptists. It's not used as a club," he said.

The new article also defines marriage in heterosexual terms as "the uniting of one man and one woman in covenant commitment for a lifetime." And it says that children are to honor and obey their parents.

"We needed to say something about what a biblical family is," said Paige Patterson, the newly elected president. "I've been a bit surprised that anyone would be surprised by this."

But such a strong statement is rare from prominent Protestant and Catholic denominations. Four years ago, Catholic bishops released a document that urged men and women to share their feelings and household duties.

It read, in part: "Marriage must never become a struggle for control. In this partnership, mutual submission — not dominance by either partner — is the key to genuine joy."

TV VS. REALITY

Study: Television offers unreal depiction of family, work

LOS ANGELES — In television land, work and family rarely clash, child care is a breeze and hardly anyone gets old.

That may be fun to watch, but the medium could do more than amuse, according to an advocacy group for women and families.

A new study released Tuesday by the National Partnership for Women and Families said an analysis of two weeks of prime-time series and TV movies on the six broadcast networks found a number of reality gaps.

Aside from the ease of family life and a lack of older people, other fantasy-reality differences on television included a lack of working mothers, fewer parents and more men than in the U.S. population.

"The conflicts and compromises that shape so many Americans' lives in their roles as parents, spouses, daughters, sons and wage-earners simply do not affect TV women or men," said Judith L. Lichtman, president of the group formerly known as the Women's Legal Defense Fund.

While acknowledging that television's goal is to entertain, Lichtman said it could do more.

"Showing how families cope with their own work-family dramas, large and small, lets viewers know they are not alone in their struggles and can offer them hope for solutions," she said.

According to the study, most shows focus on either the workplace or the home, without much crossover. Only 13 out of 150 series episodes or TV movies showed a character dealing with job vs. family stress of any kind.

Other findings from the study directed by Katharine Heintz-Knowles, a University of Washington professor:

• Thirty-four percent of TV mothers work for pay, compared with 67 percent of American mothers.

• Only 15 percent of 820 adult TV characters were parents of minors, compared with 32 percent of the U.S. population. Child care was shown as an issue for less than half of the TV parents with school-age offspring.

• More than three in five adult TV characters, or 62 percent, are men, while 49 percent of Americans are male.

Culture Club front man celebrates birthday

▶ARTIST RELEASES BOOK, NEW ALBUM STRIVING TO RETURN AFTER PAST SUCCESS IN INDUSTRY

Associated Press

When designer Donatella Versace walked down the fashion runway in Milan, Italy, this past spring, it was to the music of British pop star Boy George. It would seem an unlikely assignment for the pop singer, best known for his outlandish style of dress. Or maybe not.

Boy George, who celebrates his 37th birthday on Sunday, was the lead singer of Culture Club, which recorded such 1980s hits as "Karma Chameleon" and "Do You Really Want to Hurt Me." He also recorded a version of the title song for the 1992 film, "The Crying Game."

He hit the music scene at the start of the 1980s as a backup singer with the British group, Bow Wow Wow. In those days he was known as Lieutenant Lush.

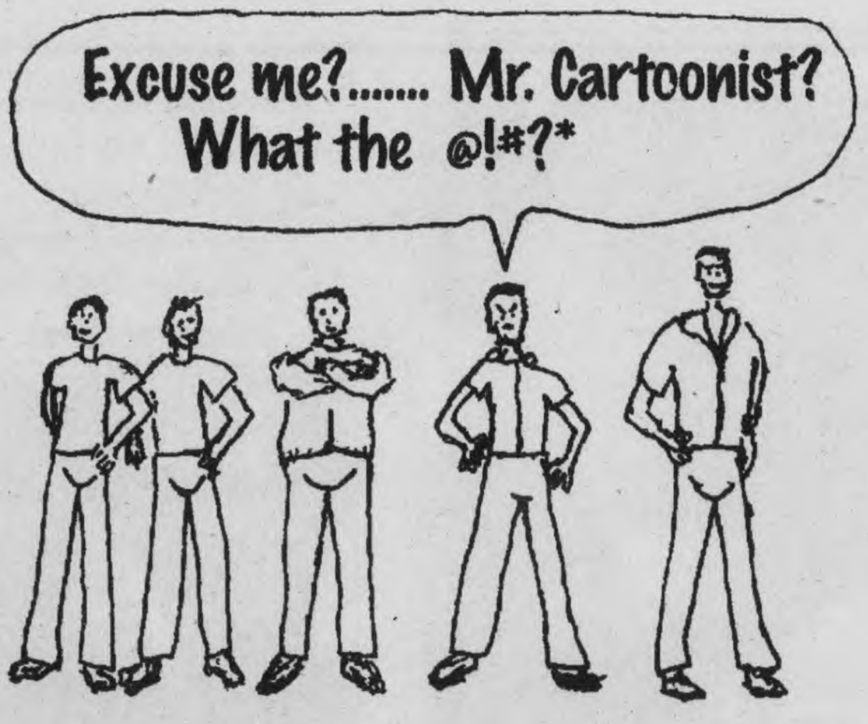
He eventually formed his own group, the Sex Gang Children, which later evolved into the internationally successful quartet Culture Club.

Boy George assumed the role as the group's most visible member, attracting attention with gobs of makeup and a smooth-as-silk voice in a 6-foot frame.

Culture Club's first two singles bombed, despite growing fashion interest in Boy George. The band finally reached No. 1 in Britain with "Do You Really Want to Hurt Me" in 1982.

The group's four albums — "Kissing to Be Clever," "Colour by Numbers," "Waking Up With the House on Fire" and "From Luxury to Heartache" — quickly became top-sellers in the first half of the 1980s. This was largely due to a unique style that combined pop, funk, reggae and soul.

"We were really lucky. We were just in the right place at the right time," Boy George said. "It's a bit like trying to catch a taxi."



But then the Culture Club's taxi took a wrong turn. Boy George was arrested in 1986 for drug possession.

His debut solo album, "Sold," was released in 1987. He made a minor comeback with the title song from "The Crying Game."

Capitalizing on renewed attention to his career, Boy George, whose real name is George O'Dowd, released a frank autobiography, "Take It Like a Man," and a new album, "Cheapness and Beauty."

Oak Ridge Boy dies at home

Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Steve Sanders, who was part of the Oak Ridge Boys for nearly a decade and sang on some of the million-selling group's later hits, died early Wednesday at his Florida home. His wife told police he shot himself.

He was 45.

Police got the call from his home in Cape Coral, Fla., at about 1 a.m. EDT. Sanders' wife, Janet, tearfully told officers, "He shot himself. He is in the bathroom," according to the police report. He was found dead on the bathroom floor.

The country-gospel group is best known for its 1981 million-seller, "Elvira."

Sanders was a rhythm guitarist, backing up the vocal group for five years before he joined the Oak Ridge Boys proper in 1987. He replaced baritone William Lee Golden, famous among fans for his "Mountain Man" attire, long hair and beard.

During his tenure, Sanders performed on No. 1 country hits including "It Takes a Little Rain (to Make Love Grow)," "This Crazy Love" and "Gonna Take a Lot of River."

Sanders quit in 1996, citing personal problems including trouble with a former wife. Golden has since returned to the group.

A native of Richland, Ga., he began his career as a child in gospel music, billed as Little Stevie Sanders. He appeared as a child on Broadway in "The Yearling" and in the 1967 film "Hurry Sundown," with Jane Fonda and Faye Dunaway.

The death is being investigated as a suicide, said Jeanne Schick of the Lee County, Fla., medical examiner's office. An autopsy was delayed while family members make arrangements to donate Sanders' organs, she said.

winter and the editing process will begin this January. She said the finished version is expected to run between 90 minutes and two hours. Larrabee said PBS is currently very interested in the film and "when" and "how" may be the only questions left to negotiate. Negotiations are currently only with PBS, she said, and the documentary may air by January 2000.

Rosemary Ramundo, research assistant for the LTER program on Konza Prairie said that the crew has put more time into their project than most film crews visiting the area.

"They're delightful people to work with, eager to see as many things as their timetable allows," she said.

Ramundo said that previous footage the crew has shown to Konza Prairie staff looks encouraging.

"We've seen a short clip and were very impressed, not only with the footage but with the soundtrack that accompanied it," Ramundo said. "I think people are pleased with their sensitivity in showing what we find very exciting."

John Blair, associate professor in biology working on Konza Prairie in soil/ecosystem ecology, also said he was very pleased with both the crew's product and working relationship with the researchers.

"You always wonder with a camera crew 'Is it going to interfere with the regular operation of a site?' That was never a problem," he said. "It's unusual because they really have an appreciation for the research and the natural beauty and the culture of the area."

Blair said he hopes the film will create a general appreciation for the diversity of the tallgrass prairies as well as a want to conserve what's left.

He said few people realize that 95 percent of the continent's grasslands have disappeared.

"A lot of people have never seen a tallgrass prairie and how it functions. Never seen a prairie fire or bison grazing," Blair said.

"Everybody hears about the rainforest but the grasslands have been the most impacted biome in North America."

3 white men could face death penalty for black men's dragging death in Texas

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JASPER, Texas — Prosecutors said Wednesday they will probably seek the death penalty against three white men charged with murder for allegedly chaining a black man to the back of a pickup truck and dragging him until the body was torn to pieces.

District Attorney Guy James Gray said prosecutors are considering whether the evidence is strong enough to add a second felony charge, such as kidnapping, which would make it a capital-punishment case.

"The very nature of this crime puts it into the death penalty," Gray said.

"We're examining our facts to see if we can fit the facts we have within the capital death statutes and prove that second felony," Gray said. "We're looking into it. We're researching the law. We're pretty satisfied we can."

Gray said it is possible one of the men could be spared the capital murder charge if his testimony is needed.

James Byrd Jr.'s mangled torso was found Sunday on a bumpy, winding country road about 10 miles from his Jasper, Texas, home. His severed head, neck and right arm were about a mile away. Investigators found a trail of blood along a two-mile stretch of road.

Byrd, 49, was last seen walking home from a niece's bridal shower Saturday night and had apparently accepted a ride from the men, one of whom he apparently knew.

Charged with murder are Lawrence Russell Brewer, 31, of Sulphur Springs, Texas, and Shawn Allen Berry and John William King, both 23, of Jasper. The three, all with criminal records, are being held without bail.

Capital murder carries a penalty of life in prison or death by injection. Ordinary murder charges are punishable by up to life in prison.

All three men asked for court-appointed attorneys. A judge did not immediately rule on the request.

CEMETERY

each year average out to about two every week, he estimated.

In his five years working at the cemetery, Jefferson said plots have been put together to stack families one on top of another with up to three burials in one grave.

The space-saving practice has possibly been in place as long as 15 years, he said.

People holding reserved graves are also checked with periodically to confirm that they still want to be buried on the site, Jefferson said.

Also, of the eight-acre cemetery, Jefferson said roughly one to 1-1/2 acres in the south end cannot be expanded into because of unmarked graves from the cholera epidemic of 1855. A granite memorial on the site says that approximately 100 soldiers, civilian workers and their dependents are buried on the plot, but a later fire destroyed many of the wooden markers. Citing rumors of expansion plans, Jefferson said he had heard that even if Fort Riley donated additional lands to the cemetery, preparing the land could take another five years.

Deb Skidmore, director of public relations for Fort Riley, said as of June 9, 61 spaces are both unoccupied and unreserved. Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., is currently pushing to either expand or relocate the cemetery's services, Skidmore said.

If expansion did occur, Skidmore said, it likely would be by the back side of the site, along the southeast side into what is currently a buffalo corral.

Skidmore said while Roberts hopes to make an announcement on plans June 15, no current plan is official.

THE 19TH HOLE

Suspect seen playing golf after being freed due to poor health

LAUREL, Miss. — One-time Klansman Deavours Nix was on the golf course less than two weeks after being rolled to court in a wheelchair claiming to be too ill to be jailed in the 1966 firebombing death of a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People official.

An oxygen tank, to which Nix, 72, had been attached for his court appearance, was sitting in the back of a golf cart near his clubs. Tuesday's temperatures were in the low 90s.

He said he "played one hole and rode 17 more. I just didn't have the strength to do it. I'm going to play again. I'm going to try. I'm not going to be a quitter."

Last month, Nix told Circuit Judge Richard McKenzie that he had cancer and required the wheelchair to get around. McKenzie agreed to free the defendant without requiring him to post bond. He did set bond of $200,000 each for two co-defendants.

Today, Nix was seen entering the Forrest County courthouse in Hattiesburg, Miss., possibly to explain his golf game to the judge. Then he apparently fell ill and an ambulance was summoned, but Nix was not immediately taken to a hospital.

The judge had declined to comment on the matter Tuesday.

Nix; Charles Noble, 55; and Sam Bowers, 73, are charged in connection with the January 1966 firebomb killing of 58-year-old civil rights activist Vernon Dahmer. All three are charged with arson; Noble and Bowers face murder charges.

Nix had told McKenzie at last month's hearing that he had "lung cancer in my right lung and two cancers in the center of my chest in those lymph nodes. They gave me so much radiation it burned up my right lung." He held a green oxygen tank in his lap and wore plastic tubing under his nose. He told Nix he needed oxygen "pretty near all the time."

State Attorney General Mike Moore, asked about the golf game, said, "He better enjoy it while he can. The 19th hole may not be all it's cracked up to be. Anybody who will commit an act like that will certainly lie to a court."

New analysis finds typhoid fever may have caused Great death

BOSTON — Alexander the Great has been thought over the centuries to have died from poisoning or malaria, but a new analysis of the skimpy historical record suggests the real culprit was typhoid fever.

Alexander died in 323 B.C. in Babylon at age 33 after conquering much of the civilized world that was known at the time to Europeans.

Dr. David W. Oldach and others from the University of Maryland laid out the case for typhoid fever in a report in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

According to historical writings, Alexander suffered chills, exhaustion and high fever in the week before he died. These symptoms are typical of a variety of infectious diseases.

Another important clue is that he suffered severe abdominal pain. This could have been the result of a perforated bowel caused by untreated typhoid fever.

The ill that best fits the symptoms, they said, is Salmonella typhi, the intestinal bug that causes typhoid fever.

Historical reports said Alexander's body did not decay until several days after his death. The doctors said this could have been a disorder in which muscle paralysis starts at the feet and moves slowly up the body, eventually slowing breathing. People with this condition, called ascending paralysis, look dead even though they are still alive.

71 suspensions, 22 arrests after high school vandalism

NEW FAIRFIELD, Conn. — A "Prank Day" vandalism spree at a high school led to the suspension of 71 students and criminal charges against 22 of them.

The New Fairfield High School students created a diversion by making a phony 911 call early Tuesday that sent police to the other side of town. Then they broke in and put Vaseline on handrails and doorknobs, pulled pins from fire extinguishers and hung pornographic pictures in the halls.

In addition to being suspended, 22 seniors were charged with burglary and criminal mis-

DOW DROPS

Dow Jones tumbles as traders worry about Asian stability

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks tumbled to a three-month low Monday, slicing 200 points off the Dow industrials as world markets took another pounding amid worries that Japan's slide into recession will undermine the global economy.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 207.01 to 8,627.93, the biggest point loss since a 222-point slide on Jan. 9 and the lowest finish since March 13.

The 2.3-percent loss represented the fifth-largest point-drop ever and sliced this year's gain to 9 percent.

A strong dollar hurts U.S. companies by making their exports more expensive in other currencies and eating away at the value of any revenues those companies manage to generate abroad.

Some observers called Monday's jitters overblown.

"The worries about profits here are way overdone," said Peter Canelo, U.S. investment strategist at Morgan Stanley Dean Witter, noting that falling borrowing costs stimulate home sales and other purchases.

"This crisis can be helpful if it puts a little pressure on the Japanese to do what they should be doing, which is to stimulate their economy," Canelo said, adding, "the market is now rapidly approaching fair value."

Ground broken for collegiate course

Golf clubs instead of shovels were used to tee off the Colbert Hills groundbreaking Friday.

The $10 million project is the first collegiate golf course in the world to be managed by the Professional Golf Association. The 18-hole golf course will cover 7,400 yards, have a separate 9-hole teaching course, a clubhouse and driving range.

Colbert Hills also will provide internships for students who major in golf course management, be the home for K-State's men and women's golf teams and be open to the public.

The golf course is named for Jim Colbert, K-State alumnus and PGA Tour and PGA Senior Tour member. Colbert is also one of the main people who helped plan the course.

Mark Truitt, president of KSU Golf Course Management and Resource Foundation, said Colbert has envisioned something spectacular.

"I just wish I could see this through Jim's eyes, because I know he's seeing something that's a lot more special than I'm even seeing," he said. "And I'm seeing something pretty darned special.

"Without Jim Colbert, this could not have happened," Truitt said.

Colbert said he helped develop the idea, but many other people and factors contributed to the development of Colbert Hills.

"The real motivation came from the football program because if that could be done, this golf course should be easy because that was i said.

Colbert said his tir State and the people Manhattan were import his wife.

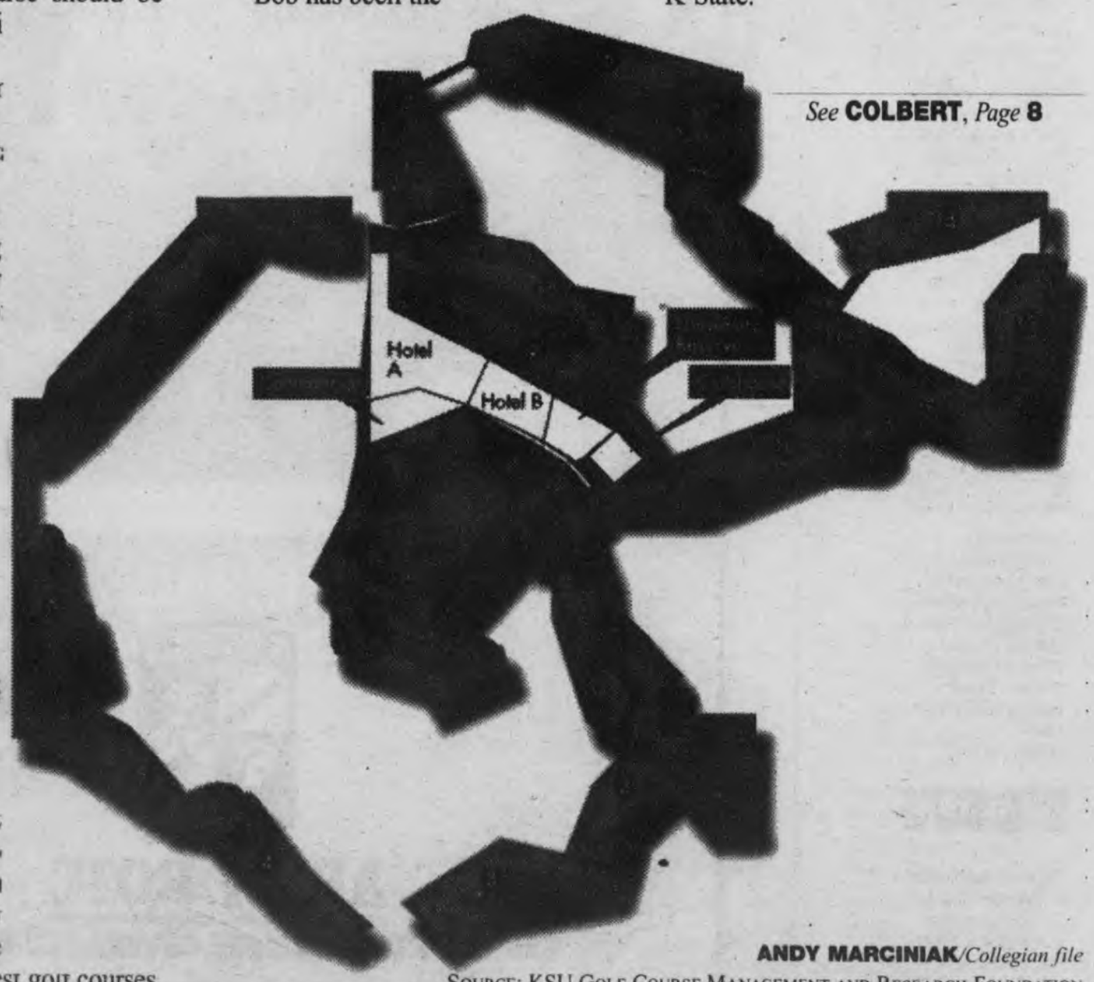
"They were so good wanted to do something university, but really for people and the people o town," he said.

K-State President Jon Wefald said he appreciates everything Colbert has done for both K-State and Manhattan.

"In order for something like this to happen, people have to dream big dreams," he said. "And, certainly the person that was most crucial to that is Jim Colbert."

Wefald said no one v have dreamed of a Colb golf course 10 or 11 yea

But, now with impro and programs at K-State will have one of the finest golf courses in the world.



Along with Colbert, Wefald said Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, also deserves a debt of gratitude.

"Bob has been the

that we deserve to give them our everlasting thanks."

Vernon Kelly, Jr., PGA Tour Properties president, said the PGA is excited about its partnership with K-State.

Student opens fire during final exams, wounds 2

Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va. — A 14-year-old student opened fire Monday with a pistol in the hallway of a high school as students took final exams, wounding a basketball coach and a volunteer aide, police said.

The injuries weren't life-threatening, doctors said.

The student was arrested and will be charged as an adult with two counts of aggravated assault and two counts of using a firearm in a felony. Police refused to identify him.

Monday's violence follows recent fatal school shootings in West Paducah, Ky.; Pearl, Miss.; Jonesboro, Ark.; and Springfield, Ore.

The boy was detained in the Richmond Juvenile Detention Center pending a court date, which had not been set Monday.

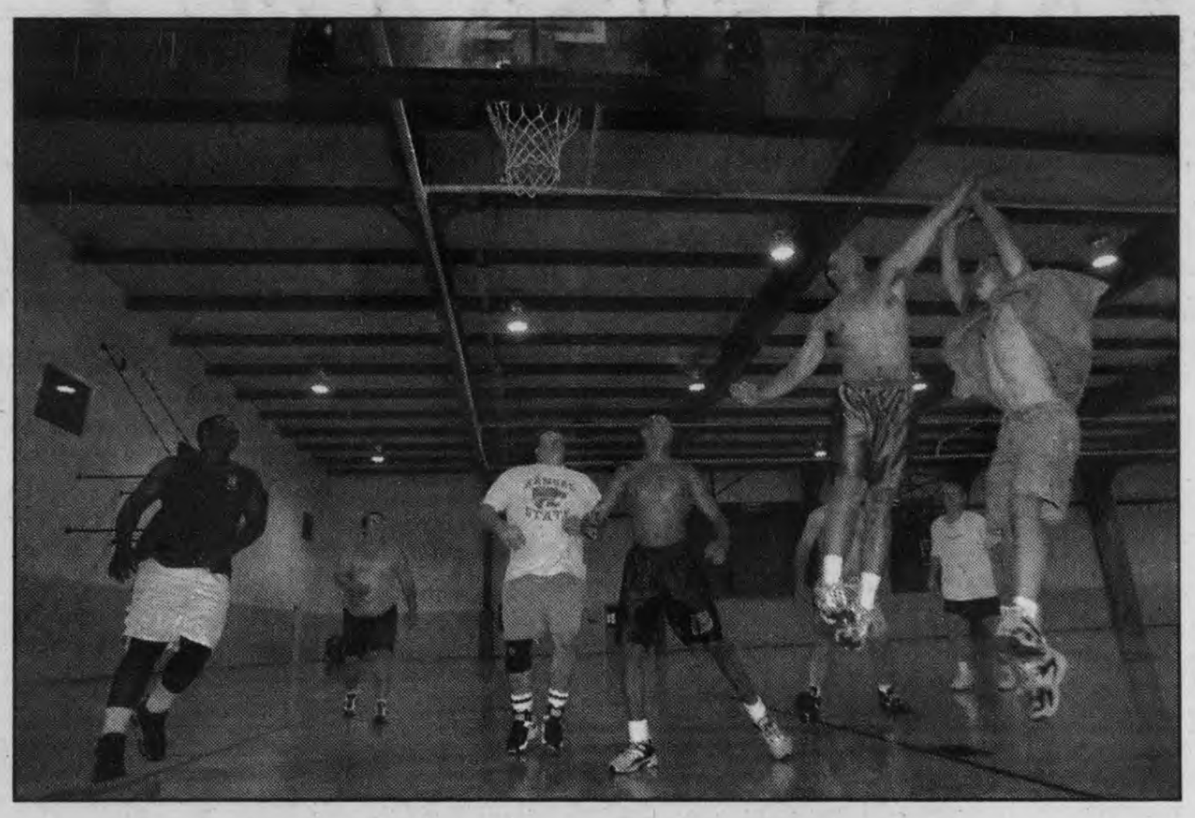
The shooting followed an argument earlier in the day between two groups of juveniles but was not gang-related, said Deputy Police Chief Theresa Gooch. Witnesses said nine or 10 shots were fired around 10 a.m.

The shots were fired from a .32-caliber Llama semiautomatic handgun, police said.

Several students were in the hallway at the time of the shooting, and investigators believe one of them was the intended target, Gooch said.

A second teen was detained for questioning, but was not involved in the shooting, she said.

Gregory Carter, 45, a basketball coach and a history teacher for 20 years at the school, underwent a 40-minute operation to remove a bullet from his abdomen. He was in stable condition and expected to fully recover.



Eloise Wilson, 74, a volunteer aide, suffered a flesh wound when a bullet grazed her right arm. She was treated and released.

Students were in classrooms taking exams on the next-to-last day of school when the shooting occurred.

Ninth-grader Floyd Peace, 15, said he was taking an exam in a classroom on the second floor when he heard shooting and screaming outside the main school office on the first floor.

"I'm stunned, shocked. I've heard it happened other places, but I never thought something like this would happen in Virginia," he said.

School was dismissed for the day.

Manhattan mends following hail storm

Scott Aldis-Wilson
Kansas State Collegian

In the aftermath of Wednesday's hail storm, local businesses, insurance adjustors and city officials are trying to decide just how badly the Little Apple has been bruised.

Sales Manager Lou Enoch of Dick Edwards Ford Lincoln Dealership on Kansas Highway 24 said that as the first wave of pea-sized hail moved in, employees were able to move 25 cars inside the service and body-shop area.

Enoch said the second wave of ping-pong-sized hailstones, however, caught him and the others totally by surprise. As of Monday afternoon, Enoch said nearly 200 cars on the lot sustained hail damage, including new, used and employees' cars.

Enoch said the lot was fortunate in having so little glass damage. There were only two windows shattered and between 15 and 20 cracked.

Enoch said total damages probably will lie between $400,000 and $500,000, with an average cost of $2,000 per car. Enoch said he currently expects to fix nearly 30 of the damaged cars and sell the others in their current state.

Ron Gard, branch claim manger for American Family Insurance, said current predictions are for 1,500 claims for the Manhattan area with a rough estimate of $2,000,000 in total damage for American Family policies.

Gard said he advises people to file promptly because companies vary on whether they assess damage or want the policyholders to do it.

He also said because most damage was due to wind and hail, most homeowners' insurance would cover them as natural perils for dwellings and personal belongings.

People with broken windows that present a danger should get emergency repairs and save the receipts for the insurance agents, Gard said.

T.J. Brown, resident adjustor for Allstate, said he recently has been helped by the company's Topeka adjustor as well as two others brought in from Texas and Wichita.

> "Be patient. It's not a life-threatening situation to drive a car with hail damage unless the windshield is smashed."
> T.J. Brown
> Allstate resident adjustor

Brown said unlike his typical four to five claims a day, he and the other three have been processing nearly 16 a day — about one every half hour. He said he expects the adjustments for the storm to take another two to three weeks.

Brown said he advised owners of damaged cars to not hurry to file. The reason, he said, is that even with a damage check body shops will be too full to help immediately.

"Be patient. It's not a life-threatening situation to drive a car with hail damage unless the windshield is smashed," Brown said.

Despite damage from Wednesday, Brown said the area was lucky. The type of hail that fell was white and chalky and usually explodes when it hits.

"As bad as it was, it wasn't hard, clear hail," Brown said. "Hard stuff will just hit and tear it up."

Rich Doan, city clerk, said efforts began Monday to assess damage for city-owned property. The work will begin in the downtown and central parts of the city where the city appeared to be the hardest hit, he said. The estimates could take several weeks.

The storm, he said, might have shredded trees but didn't have the significant wind damage associated with most severe thunderstorms that topple limbs.

Chuck Williams, assistant director of public works, said the most significant development is that 75 streetlight globes downtown will need to be replaced from hail damage. Roofs and vehicles also will be checked over the next two to three weeks, Williams said.

Pat Collins, emergency management coordinator for Riley Emergency Management Office, said a concern after the storm was the delay before the severe thunderstorm watch was issued by the Severe Storms Forecast Center.

Collins said because the watch typically starts the preparedness system that notifies police and ambulance services of possible severe storms, time counts.

Although the National Weather Service later issued a severe thunderstorm warning, which requires one-half to three-quarter inch hail or 58 mph winds, a more timely severe thunderstorm watch might have given his spotters about 10 minutes more lead time, Collins said.

Poor moms allege denial of painkillers by doctors

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — At least seven women were denied anesthesia during childbirth because they could not come up with cash to pay the doctor, according to a lawsuit brought by a mother who said she writhed in pain and begged for relief to no avail.

A lawyer for the woman suing, Ozzie Chavez, said the anesthesiologist wanted cash because the state's Medi-Cal insurance program for poor people did not pay enough.

"They left her there screaming in pain while she's begging for medication," lawyer Catherine Beatty said Monday. "It's something out of a Dickens novel. A poor woman giving birth, they might as well made her go to a workhouse like in old England."

Authorities are investigating Chavez's claim that an anesthesiologist at Northridge Hospital Medical Center refused her an epidural block. An epidural, or "spinal," is a form of anesthesia used during labor that lets the woman stay awake while blocking pain in the lower half of the body.

The same anesthesiologist, Dr. Lori Burke, also denied epidurals to six other women for the same reason, according to court papers.

Gingrich delivers commencement speech amid protest

SAN DIEGO — Nearly 40 graduates turned their backs on House Speaker Newt Gingrich and walked out as he delivered the commencement address at the University of California, San Diego.

The Sunday walkout culminated protests by students who opposed the decision to have the Georgia Republican speak and demanded a say in the selection process.

Gingrich was gracious about the dissent, saying he participated in a few protests in his days as a student and recognized the value of differing opinions.

He approached the podium amid both boos and cheers. The crowd on the university's athletic field was estimated by UCSD officials at 8,000.

"I suspect that here today, virtually all of you — clearly not all of you, but virtually all of you — are very happy, and your parents are happy because you made it," Gingrich said.

Last year's UCSD graduation speaker was President Clinton, who used the occasion to launch a yearlong discussion of race relations. Gingrich's speech covered science, technology, political leadership and federal funding for research.

Some protesters tied Gingrich's visit to what they said is a crisis in minority representation and declining admissions on the heels of Proposition 209, the 1996 measure that dismantled many California affirmative-action programs.

Those who walked out remained at the rear, staying mostly quiet until just before Gingrich concluded. They then marched off, at times shouting, "No University Without Diversity."

NEW WORLD DISORDER

Communist lawmaker killed in India

PATNA, India — Gunmen on a motorbike opened fire on a car carrying a communist lawmaker and two of his supporters in eastern India, killing all three, police said Monday.

Ajit Kumar Sarkar was the second legislator slain in Bihar state in as many days. The Communist Party of India blamed Sunday's killing in Purnea, 1,000 miles east of New Delhi, on landowners.

Nearly 10,000 people poured into Purnea's streets and pelted police with rocks as news of Sarkar's killing spread. Police fired in the air and beat protesters with bamboo sticks.

On Saturday, Brij Bihari Prasad, a former state minister in the governing Rashtriya Janata Party, and his guard were killed by suspected political rivals.

Bihar has a reputation as India's most lawless state. Many of its legislators are accused of leading criminal gangs and buying their way into local politics. The gangs often are caught up in Bihar's caste conflicts, pitting upper-caste landowners against lower-caste tenant farmers.

Police crack down on neo-Nazis in northern German state

ORANIENBURG, Germany — German police arrested 28 people suspected of using banned neo-Nazi salutes or slogans — including three who gave the Nazi salute at a former concentration camp.

Last week's crackdown in the northeastern state of Brandenburg involved mainly people ages 15 to 25, although one was 37, police said Monday.

In the town of Zehdenick, about 20 miles north of Berlin, 21 people were arrested after shouting "Sieg Heil" at a party.

Nearby at the former Ravensbrueck concentration camp, three others were arrested for allegedly giving the stiff-armed Nazi salute. At a youth club in Frankfurt an der Oder on the Polish border, police picked up another four also suspected of giving the salute.

Germany is combating rising neo-Nazism; using banned neo-Nazi symbols can draw up to a three-year prison term.

Bicycle officer enforces law on K-State campus

Brian Crisp
Kansas State Collegian

K-State Police have a weapon against reckless bicyclists and illegally parked bicycles: a white Cannondale.

Oscar Ruiz is a bicycle officer for the K-State Police. Ruiz is the only bicycle officer employed by the campus police.

Ruiz said this seems unusual to him. He is a native of New York City, where bicycle officers abound.

Lt. Richard Herrman of the campus police said there are many advantages to bicycle officers.

"The bicycle is quieter, more accessible and more visible to students," Herrman said.

Ruiz's duties are similar to any other officer. Ruiz engages in traffic control and helping people, but his main duty is enforcing the bicycle regulations set by K-State Parking Services.

"I get the same calls except jumpstarting cars or helping people into their cars. I can't do that," Ruiz said.

One of the most commonly encountered problems is students illegally locking bikes to railings or light posts, Ruiz said.

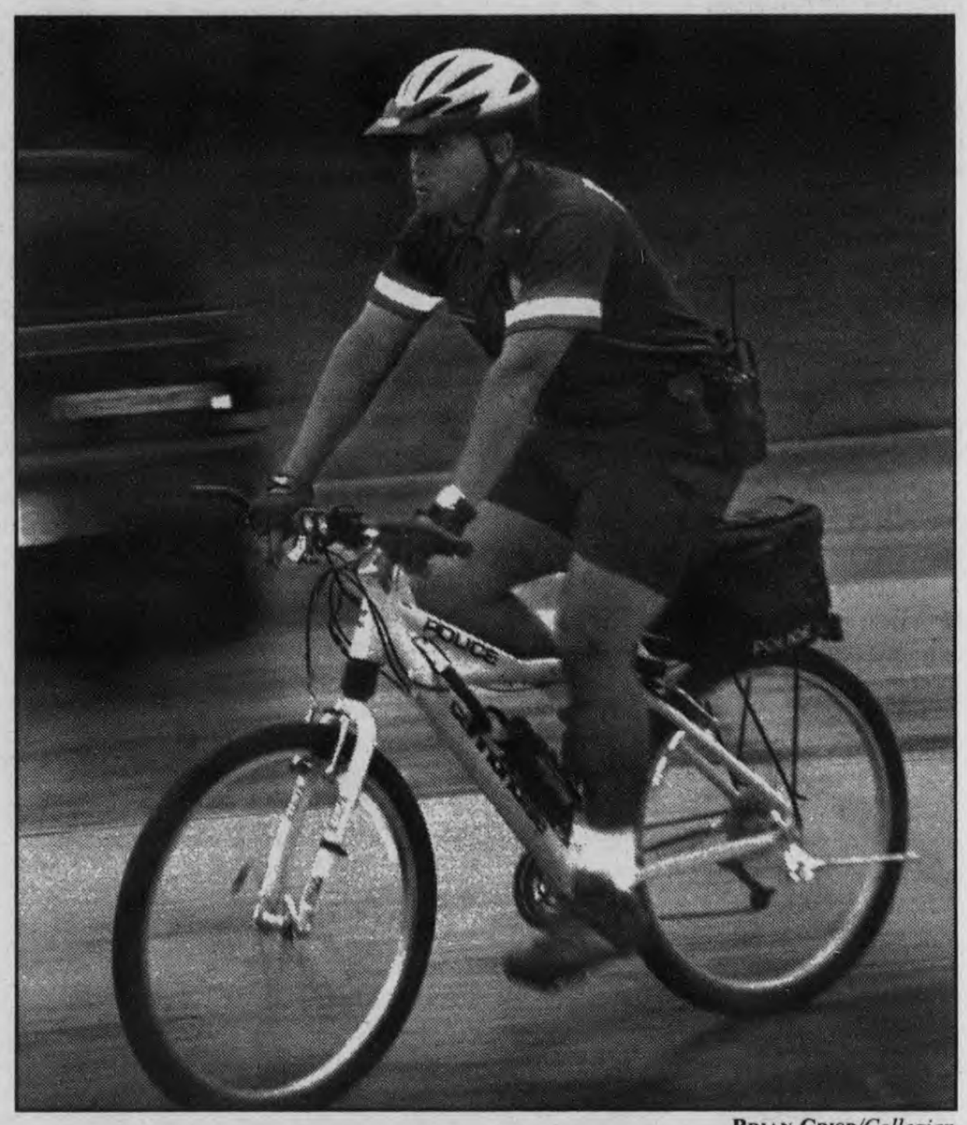
If encountered with an illegally locked bike, Ruiz has a few options. He first will issue a citation of $15. Because bike owners cannot be traced like cars, sometimes Ruiz will lock the bike and place a notice on the bike. This is called field impoundment. The notice tells the owner to come to Edwards Hall to pay the citation in order to get the bike unlocked.

If a bicyclist is endangering the safety of others by locking the bike to a handicap handrail or blocking a fire exit, the lock will be cut off and the bike will be impounded at the police station, Ruiz said.

"If the person has registered their bike, we can identify the person and get a hold of them before we have to cut the bike off," Ruiz said.

Another problem encountered by Ruiz is students riding their bikes on sidewalks. This is why many bike racks have been moved to the campus perimeter, Ruiz said.

Ruiz said being on a bike doesn't hinder his ability to make an arrest.



"If I ever have a problem I usually call it into dispatch and they'll have a patrol car there in seconds. If I ever have to transport someone there's always a patrol car nearby," Ruiz said.

Ruiz said there could be more bicycle officers in the future.

"I think with the way things are moving with the city, improving bike routes and bike access to campus, I think they won't have a choice but to have more bicycle officers," Ruiz said.

Ruiz said sometimes he draws attention from onlookers.

"The day-care kids, when they go through campus and are waving at me and when students, who are interested, come and visit from other schools, that's where I get the joy," he said.

Athletes inducted into Sports Hall of Fame recall youth activities

Danica Coto
Kansas State Collegian

Athletes inducted into the Kansas Sports Hall of Fame accepted their awards on what Gov. Bill Graves described as a sun-drenched day.

An overflowing crowd was drawn to Abilene, Kan., on Saturday by Rolando Blackman, Jim Colbert, Barry Sanders, Billie Moore and the late Dev Nelson. The hall of famers recalled how they spent their youth honing athletic skills that carried them to their stardom.

"It's a tremendous honor to have this great opportunity — to get a call to be here today," Blackman said. "It's a great, proud moment in K-State history."

Blackman said the No. 1 factor in his choosing K-State in 1977 was Jack Hartman, then coach of the Wildcat basketball team. The No. 2 factor was that he found the people to be nice and friendly, he said.

"The atmosphere was conducive to my own personality," Blackman said. "I got an opportunity to grow not only as a basketball player but as a person."

Blackman said being from Brooklyn, N.Y., did not prepare him for a trip to the Midwest.

"I thought I was going back to the John Wayne days," Blackman said.

When looking back on his days at K-State, Blackman remembered the enthusiasm of students and how his game was taken to the next level.

"I think back to the crowd being so close to the floor, to the students being so close to the game," Blackman said. "It's where I got an opportunity to get ingrained in the game. It's not just talent that takes you anywhere, it's also consistency."

Hartman said that when he first saw Blackman, few inspiring thoughts crossed his mind.

"'There's no way that skinny kid can play in the Big 8, I thought," Hartman said.

But as Hartman noticed Blackman's quickness, skills and jumping abilities, he said he was quick to change his mind.

"He was unselfish to a fault, which is a great compliment to him," Hartman said. "But when the game was on the line, the score was close, you wanted the ball in Rolando's hands."

Blackman is now retired but still follows the NBA closely.

Blackman made the cover of Sports Illustrated in 1981 for one of the most famous baskets in K-State history — with two seconds left against No. 2-ranked Oregon State, he made a 17-footer from the baseline.

He went on to join the Dallas Mavericks and spent 11 seasons with them.

"I was so fundamentally sound and ready to go. When you are there in actuality, nothing else tells you that you are at the top," Blackman said.

Blackman said he is still at the top.

"It's a tremendous ride, and I am trying to keep it going," he said.

Jim Colbert, member of the Senior PGA Tour and K-State alumnus, also has had much success.

After establishing himself as a successful PGA golfer and winning eight tournament titles in 17 years, Colbert was set back by prostate cancer surgery. Colbert said this has not hampered his drive for success.

Colbert participated in the groundbreaking event of Colbert Hills Golf Course, the first collegiate course to be managed by the PGA Tour.

"The course is going to be a great gathering center for future alumni. It will entice students back," Colbert said. "One of the very top management companies in the world will provide

Jim Colbert

Jim Colbert was born in New Jersey in 1941. He graduated from K-State in 1964. Since becoming a member in 1991, Colbert has been a highly successful player on the Senior PGA Tour. He was the Senior PGA Player of the Year in 1995. On the regular PGA Tour, he won eight tournament titles in 17 years. Colbert is a longtime donator to K-State Olympic sports and to K-State's golf teams, including the establishment of a celebrity golf tournament to benefit K-State's athletic programs. His latest project has been the designing of the Colbert Hills Golf Course. The 18-hole course will be located on the northwest edge of Manhattan and will be the first collegiate course in the nation to be managed by the PGA Tour.

Rolando Blackman

Rolando Blackman was born in Panama in 1959. He graduated from K-State in 1996. During his basketball career at K-State (1977-81), he was called the "consummate player" by Coach Jack Hartman. Blackman was a three-time All-Big 8 selection. He was the Big 8 Player of the Year as a junior in 1980 and also was selected for the U.S. Olympic team in 1980. In 1981, he was awarded with All-America honors, along with making one of the most famous shots in K-State history. With two seconds left in the game against No. 2-ranked Oregon State in the 1981 NCAA Tournament, he made a 17-footer from the baseline. Blackman finished his career at K-State as the second-leading scorer in K-State history with 1,844 points, behind Mike Evans. Blackman retired from professional basketball in 1995 after being a four-time NBA All-Star, scoring 16,643 points and setting seven team records.

Devere "Dev" Vincent Nelson

Devere Vincent Nelson was born in 1926 and died in 1993. He graduated from K-State in 1949 and left to start his broadcasting career. He came back to K-State in 1954 and was the "Voice of the Wildcats" until 1979. In the 25 years he was the radio announcer at K-State, was named as the Kansas Sportscaster of the Year five times and was the first play-by-play broadcaster on the Big 8 Basketball Network. In addition to broadcasting, he was the sports information director at K-State from 1966 to 1972.

BRADY LAW

Administration seeks extension of waiting period for gun buys

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A senior White House official said the five-day waiting period for handgun purchases has saved lives and should be extended beyond its expiration date this fall.

Under the 1993 Brady Act, the waiting period is to end on Nov. 30, replaced by a nationwide instant background check for all would-be handgun buyers.

But Rahm Emanuel, an adviser to President Clinton, said Sunday that even with the instant check the administration hoped to keep the waiting period.

"We think that's a priority, because it has worked effectively," he told NBC's "Meet The Press."

Twenty percent of guns used in murders are purchased in the week before the crime, and the cooling-off period has helped prevent crimes of passion, Emanuel said. He called the waiting period "good common sense."

Extending the waiting period would require legislative action, and neither the Republican-run Congress nor the pro-gun lobby is likely to accept the idea easily.

Tanya Metaksa, chief lobbyist for the National Rifle Association, told The Associated Press that Congress has given the Justice Department and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms nearly $250 million to get the instant check system up and running and "nobody to date has even suggested that we go and keep the five-day wait."

The NRA generally backs the instant check. NRA President Charlton Heston, also on "Meet the Press," likened it to "a credit card, and if you're proven to have a clean, no felony record, then you're allowed to buy the gun."

At the same time, the NRA is pressing for legislation barring the FBI from imposing a gun tax to help pay for the computer system.

Attorney General Janet Reno said last week that states are being asked to run their own criminal background checks, and the Justice Department said the FBI plans to charge $13 to $16 per check to states that do not perform their own. About half the states so far have agreed to do their own checks.

Soldiers return from Eastern Europe

Cait Purinton
Kansas State Collegian

The 450th Transportation Battalion returned home May 20 after an eight-month deployment in Hungary, Croatia and Bosnia.

After returning home, Capt. Gale Bassett and other soldiers remembered their time overseas and what they missed most about home.

Their battalion was stationed at an old Soviet MiG air base that now is used by Americans and Hungarians. The battalion headquarters is used as an intermediate staging base for the reception and onward movement of U.S. personnel and equipment in an area of operation called the Bosnia Theater, Capt. Edward Keck said.

Bassett said his initial reaction when he arrived was apprehension. No one had told him what his personal duty was yet. He found out he was responsible for contracts with the host nation, so he worked a lot with Hungarian interpreters.

He said he tried taking a class to learn the language, but because it is so hard to understand, he said he only learned 10 Hungarian words in 6 1/2 months.

The language barrier wasn't the only difference to which they had to adjust.

"There's a lot of devastation and destruction in Bosnia. Everywhere we went, we saw results of the war," Keck said.

He said every building they saw in Sarajevo, Bosnia, either had been blown up, or there were bullet holes in the building's walls.

Bassett said they still are finding war criminals, mass graves and land mines.

Capt. Richard V. Dederer said the soccer field used in the 1984 Winter Olympics in Sarajevo is now a cemetery divided into three sections. There are separate parts of the cemetery for the Bosnian-Serbs, Croatians and the Muslims.

Through all the destruction, Bassett said the Shrine of Madagascar had not been touched by the Serbs or Croatians, but everything around it had been destroyed.

Bassett said his experience in Bosnia gave him an intense appreciation for all the freedom in the United States.

Dederer said the deployment was a unique experience a lot of soldiers would not have had any other way except through the Army. He said they saw parts of Europe rarely seen by Americans.

Dederer said there weren't many recreational opportunities because the soldiers were locked down. He said soldiers had some opportunities to go out and experience the culture.

The soldiers did have a chance to watch the 1997 Tostitos Fiesta Bowl on television, but Keck said they had to get up at 3 a.m. to watch the game, so there weren't many watching it.

Dederer had the opportunity to watch a Croatian version of the musical "Evita," which he described as being quite unique. He said his ticket, which normally would have cost him $150 for a center balcony seat in New York City, cost the equivalent of $8.

Dederer said he came home for 30 days in December and during that time his wife Jessica became pregnant. He said he missed four months of his baby's development.

"She was stronger than I thought she would be," Dederer said. "It was worth the self-sacrifice to secure peace in a region that hasn't seen peace in years."

Keck said that without a doubt, he missed his family the most.

His wife and three sons sent quite a few pictures and care packages while he was gone, but they mainly kept in touch through e-mail.

"We're a pretty tight family, so there was not a lot of readjustment," Keck said.

Bassett said during his first week home it took some time readjusting. He said he and his wife sat down to talk and reconnect.

Bassett said he missed his two sons and the simple pleasures of everyday life.

He said it was difficult to talk to his family overseas because the phone lines were terrible and they had to drive as far as 40 miles for something like a cellular-phone battery.

Bassett's friends, who are teachers in Junction City and Lawrence, had their classes send him letters and he would send pictures back to them.

"It gives the students insight on what's going on," he said.

Bassett said the Army already is asking for volunteers to go back in October or November, but he doesn't know of anybody who wants to go back.

"I know I don't want to do it," he said.

'Armageddon' star criticizes Clinton, modern religion

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Like a character in one of his movies, Bruce Willis came out blazing with both barrels in a George magazine interview, calling Bob Dole a "nitwit," pronouncing Louis Farrakhan "a hero of mine" and declaring that organized religions are "dying forms."

The "Die Hard" star told the political magazine edited by John F. Kennedy Jr. that if he were black, "I'd be with Farrakhan, too."

"A lot of people feel Louis Farrakhan stands for a lot of negative things," Willis said of the Nation of Islam leader. "But he is raising his voice against inequality. Anyone who stands up against injustice is a hero of mine."

Willis also said he switched from Democrat to Republican in 1992 and supported President Bush for re-election because he felt Bill Clinton's campaign was too divisive. But he said he sat out the 1996 election between Dole and President Clinton because he considered the Republican "a nitwit."

Willis also criticized organized religions, which he called "dying forms."

"Modern religion is the end trail of modern mythology," he said. "But there are people who interpret the Bible literally. Literally! I choose not to believe that's the way. And that's what makes America cool, you know?"

Willis latest film, the action movie "Armageddon," comes out in July.

'Real World' cast faces real opposition in newest installment filmed in Seattle

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Gone are the surveillance cameras, video crews at every step, heckling at concerts and snide notices in gossip columns.

Now the cast in the latest reincarnation of "The Real World" can get down to being celebrities.

There was no script for this televisual cinema verite, just candid footage of seven bright, attractive young strangers, college students chosen from about 15,000 applicants to live and work together for 4 1/2 months in an artistically cacophonous electronic fishbowl.

"I didn't know how much of a struggle it would be," said Nathan Blackburn, 21, of Chesterfield, Va., a Virginia Military Institute student.

"It got to be so stressful for me, it would get to be like a prison sometimes," said Stephen Williams, 20, of San Diego and the University of California at Berkeley.

"No one can ever be used to having cameras follow you around all day," said Rebecca Lord, 19, of Charlottesville, Va., a University of Virginia student. "I really thought I was going to have a breakdown."

One week after a one-hour special on cast selection, the MTV series resumes Tuesday at 10 p.m. EDT with a one-hour introduction to Nathan, Rebecca, Stephen and the others. In the weeks to come, MTV will air 18 half-hour episodes compiled from 1,894 hours of videotape by Bunim-Murray Productions of Los Angeles.

Like "Beavis and Butt-head," "Unplugged," "Singled Out" and "Choose or Lose," "The Real World" has helped to define MTV.

Todd Cunningham, vice president of research and planning for the Viacom cable subsidiary, wouldn't reveal ratings but said the show has drawn more viewers every season and is now broadcast in 41 countries.

On the show, the participants are identified only by their first names. Last names for this article were obtained from outside sources.

From mid-January to late May, they occupied 4,500 square feet on Pier 70, Seattle.

Their fantasy land was adorned with 67 donated art works, ranging from beds with hand-carved, Northwest-coast Indian-style headboards to a larger-than-life barking metal bulldog for a doorbell. There were 2,000 books, a rock-climbing wall, exercise machines, an espresso maker, a pool table, an aquarium and a hot tub.

Twelve surveillance cameras and microphones were linked to an adjoining control room with 15 TV monitors. At least two video crews were on call 24 hours a day.

The footage was then "condensed into small pods of time and into story lines," co-executive producer Mary-Ellis Bunim said.

Bunim previously produced soaps such as "As the World Turns" and "Search for Tomorrow." Co-executive producer Jon Murray has a background of news and documentary work.

They aim to show people who are "in the process of defining who they are ... and have the courage to make those choices in front of the camera," Bunim said.

"It's very compelling," she said. "People try to write dialogue representing this age group and fail abysmally."

Not all feel well-represented.

"The first episode, I was a little sex kitten," said Lindsay Brien, 21, a University of Michigan student from Aspen, Colo., in an interview after taping ended.

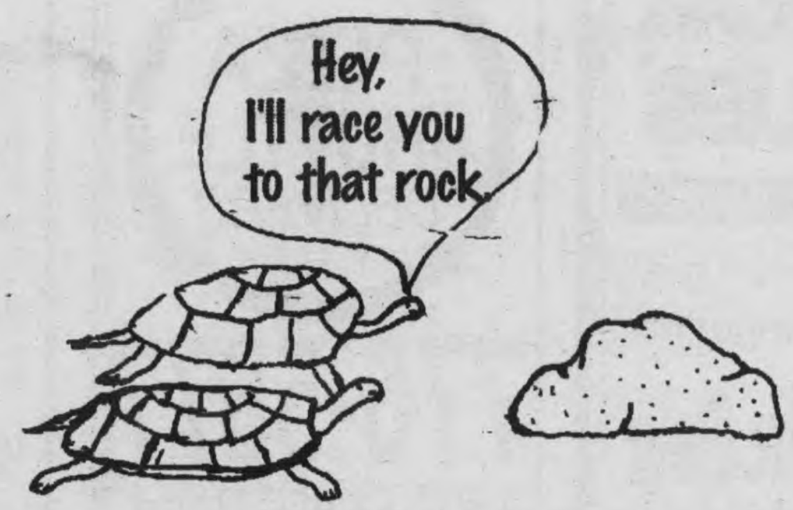
"That's not who I am ... well, that's a little part of what I am, but I'm also the grandma of the house," she said. "I'd come home by 10 p.m. I didn't date anybody while I was here."

Many locals questioned the show's authenticity and integrity.

The Stranger, a widely circulated counterculture weekly, printed the secret location of the group's lodgings and offered $1,000 for the most unflattering videotape of the cast.

Some nightclub employees said MTV crews asked that cast members under 21 be admitted in violation of liquor laws. At the Roanoke Tavern, the staff had T-shirts printed reading "Seattle thinks The Real World sucks."

At some concerts attended by the cast, fans chanted obscenities to make the resulting footage unusable.



After six seasons in New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, London, Miami and Boston, respectively, some elements seem almost scripted, especially in the season premiere.

Pulse-pounding music plays over rapid-fire scene-setting shots of Seattle's Space Needle and Monorail, downtown skyline and waterfront, fireboat in full spray, drip-drip-drip weather and salmon-tossing fishmongers.

There are whoops of joy as each cast member is chosen, then teary goodbyes and an edgy glee on arrival.

CHAINSAWS AND SQUEEGEES

Sunbeam fires 'Chain Saw Al'

MIAMI — Sunbeam Corp. chairman "Chain Saw Al" Dunlap now knows what it's like to be on the wrong end of the ax.

Sunbeam's board unanimously voted to remove Dunlap over the weekend after his cost-cutting failed to turn the company around. In recent months, the home appliance makers' stock sank, sales lagged and confidence in Dunlap's leadership vanished.

Dunlap, who spent less than two years at Sunbeam, was replaced as chairman by board member Peter Langerman, who represents Sunbeam's largest shareholder, Franklin Mutual Advisers Inc.

Jerry Levin, executive vice president of MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings and former Revlon Inc. chairman, was given Dunlap's position of chief executive.

Dunlap had promised to turn the Delray Beach-based company into a top performer. As recently as February, he was in good graces with the board, signing a three-year contract that prompted him to say, "You can't overpay a great executive. Don't you think I'm a bargain?"

The contract calls for him to get $2 million a year through January 2001 and benefits including a country club membership in the event of his dismissal.

Dunlap, 60, did not immediately return a call.

Off-duty officer arrested after squeegee man shot in Bronx

NEW YORK — An off-duty police officer was arrested Monday for allegedly shooting a man who was cleaning car windows with a squeegee.

Officer Michael Meyer, 28, was charged with attempted murder, assault, reckless endangerment and weapons possession, Detective Mark Patterson said.

Meyer allegedly shot 37-year-old Antoinne Reid in the chest Sunday afternoon as Reid was cleaning car windows near an expressway in the Bronx, Sgt. Cory Cuneo said.

Reid was in critical condition early Monday.

Meyer, an officer since 1992, was suspended without pay from his job in the police building maintenance department.

become," Kelly said.

"Your standards are fully compatible with ours," he said.

When Colbert and Krause began planning the golf course, many people were unsure about the plans, including Stephen Mona, chief executive officer of Golf Course Superintendents Association of America. GCSAA is also a partner of Colbert Hills.

Mona had dinner with Colbert and Krause to talk about the plans for Colbert Hills.

"At the outset of the dinner, I was skeptical that this could happen," he said.

"However, as the night went on, it became apparent to me that these gentlemen were going to be successful."

Mona said now he is excited about Colbert Hills, and he said he thinks it is going to be a unique golf course.

"This is the only one that's going to blend hospitality and business skills along with turf-grass skills," he said.

Another extension of Colbert Hills is The First Tee Program.

Richard Bowers, vice president of community affairs for the PGA Tour, said The First Tee Program will make golf accessible and affordable for underprivileged children across the United States.

"These kids are going to get an experience they never would've gotten anywhere in the country," Bowers said.

The course is scheduled to be finished in spring 2000.

first class facilities and management. The university will be able to hold national functions here because of such amenities."

As Colbert reminisced about his K-State days, a smile came across his face.

"The day I was supposed to enroll at Oklahoma State, I called K-State because at the time I wanted to play football," Colbert said.

Colbert enrolled at K-State, but immediately focused on golf.

"I changed because I was little bit slow."

The late Dev Nelson, "Voice of the Wildcats," was represented by Ralph Titus.

"He was a K-Stater, and oh, how he bled purple," Titus said.

Titus said Nelson's ambition was to broadcast basketball.

"He had a great facility for ad-libbing," Titus said. "I don't think a day ever went by when students came by to talk to Dev."

After the induction, two blocks were filled with fans lined up outside the Abilene Civic Center awaiting autographs from their idols. Ernie Barrett, director of development for the Department of Athletics at K-State and member of the Kansas Sports Hall of Fame Board of Trustees, said he was pleased to have such worthy and honorable inductees.

"Especially to have three K-Staters. It was indeed a real honor," Barrett said.

Workers sue for discrimination

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A group of black workers at Wonder Bread is suing the company for racial discrimination, claiming supervisors told racist jokes, wouldn't promote them and even banned them from talking in groups because they were afraid of gangs.

The 15 black workers are seeking $260 million in damages for the systematic discrimination, said their lawyer, former San Francisco Supervisor Angela Alioto.

"It's an unbelievable lawsuit," Alioto said Monday. "I think that their stories are incredible, and they need to be heard."

The lawsuit against the parent company, Kansas City, Mo.-based Interstate Brands Corp., and Wonder, the nation's largest bakery, and five local managers was filed June 11 in San Francisco Superior Court.

Continual racial jokes and insults have led to the bakery being known as "The White House," the lawsuit states. The group also claims that Wonder won't hire new black employees or promote the current employees.

Interstate Brands senior vice president Mark Dirkes denied the "congregating" ban outright and said any supervisory-level job was posted and open to all applicants.

Negotiations continue in GM strike, layoffs made

Associated Press

DETROIT — The United Auto Workers' upcoming convention and General Motors' annual summer break could increase the pressure on the union to settle its two strikes against the world's No. 1 automaker.

The strikes by 9,200 workers at plants in Flint, Mich., have idled more than 63,000 other GM workers at 16 assembly plants and 66 additional parts plants throughout North America.

The UAW's triennial constitutional convention begins Monday in Las Vegas.

Union President Stephen Yokich would find it politically helpful to go to Nevada with a settlement that he could promote as saving dues-paying jobs.

If there is no settlement earlier, talks could be complicated by the fact that union leaders will be busy at the week-long convention.

The convention will be followed on June 29 with the start of GM's annual two-week plant shutdown. U.S. workers idled by the walkouts will not get their union-won "holiday pay" for the first week of the shutdown unless they're back at work by June 26.

Workers getting by on $150-a-week strike pay or state unemployment benefits would not be pleased to lose what amounts to a week's pay for time they'd have off anyway.

GM's UAW contract classifies the second week of the break as mandatory vacation, for which workers received pay in a lump sum earlier in the year, company spokesman Alan Adler said.

Union officials insist the convention and shutdown will have no effect on the talks, even though UAW Vice President Richard Shoemaker, who has been in Flint since the strikes began, will take off for Las Vegas in the next few days.

The strikes continue to affect GM's North American production.

On Monday, GM added two car plants in Lansing, Mich., and the Cadillac plant in Detroit to the long list of those affected by the walkouts and said it laid off several thousand more workers.

The UAW said there was no measurable progress in weekend talks. Negotiators kept short hours both days, an indication that they made little headway.

"They're going very, very slow," said Larry Mathews, a Local 651 representative at one of the strikebound plants, Delphi Flint East. "The good news is they're still talking."

Mike Whitty, a labor professor at the University of Detroit Mercy, said the likelihood of a settlement this week becomes greater as the pain on both sides increases.

"Intense, costly and strategic strikes like this are usually of short duration," Whitty said. "My guess is they'd wrap it up by the end of this week with something they can live with."

If no settlement is reached this week, most of the rest of GM's North American production will come to a halt.

The strikes at the Flint Metal Center and Delphi Flint East are largely over fears that the automaker plans to reduce the plants' employment or even close the factories.

"There's always that concern," Mathews said. "We're losing jobs monthly."

Local contract disputes over health and safety issues, subcontracting and work speedups also are at issue.

Testimony ends, jury deliberations to begin in Koch trial

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Lawyers for the four multimillionaire Koch brothers wrap up their cases today, condensing 10 weeks of complicated testimony into three-hour presentations for jurors.

Witnesses have included all four Koch brothers, who are embroiled in a dispute over a Koch Industries stock sale in 1993. Two brothers, among other former shareholders,say they believe they were cheated by the company. The two other brothers, who are company executives, were named in the federal lawsuit.

Other witnesses were accountants, investment bankers and former executives. Much of the testimony has been dry or technical, with lengthy explanations about financial matters and the particulars of the oil-refining business, one of many of Koch Industries' interests.

But some of the testimony has been more personal, about the brothers' college camaraderie and a ruined Christmas dinner.

U.S. District Judge Sam Crow has given each side three hours for closing arguments. On Wednesday, he will instruct the jury. Deliberations will start after the jury is instructed.

Bill and Frederick Koch are leading the former shareholders in the lawsuit against Koch Industries and its current and former officers. They claim the company withheld important information about a Michigan oil refinery before the 1983 stock sale. Without that information, they claim, they settled for a lower stock price than they would have otherwise.

On the other side are Charles Koch, the company's chairman and chief executive officer, and David Koch, an executive vice president. They deny the company cheated anybody, and claim the lawsuit is part of a personal vendetta by Bill Koch.

COPYCAT CRIME?

Black man in Louisiana says he was dragged by white men

SLIDELL, La. — Police are investigating the complaint of a black man who said three whites yelled racial slurs and dragged him beside their car in a manner similar to a killing in Texas.

Cornelius Weaver, 23, said he was walking home from a convenience store early Saturday when three men in a passing car yelled racial slurs. The front and rear passengers then grabbed him by the arm and pulled him along for 2 1/2 blocks, Weaver told police.

Weaver, 23, suffered abrasions and bruises on his limbs and torso when he rolled away from the car, sheriff's spokesman James Hartman said.

"He tells a story that amounts to a hate crime," Hartman said. "We're still investigating but we don't have much to work with."

James Byrd Jr., 49, was dragged to death in a racial attack in Jasper, Texas. His body was found early on the morning of June 7. Three white men believed to have ties to white supremacist groups are suspects in that case.

On Friday, a 17-year-old black youth in Belleville, Ill., near St. Louis, said three white youths asked him to approach their vehicle and then dragged him by his shirt until it ripped and he escaped. He was treated for scratches, bruises and burns on his face, arms, legs and buttocks.

Weaver told The Times-Picayune of New Orleans that he feared the men wanted to rob him or kidnap him. "I kept saying, 'Please, let me go.'"

His mother, Mary Burnett, would not speculate on whether her son was the victim of a copycat of the attack in Texas.

"I'm just aggravated," she said. "I didn't think anyone would do anything like this here."

SPACE JAM

Space officials say they lack funds to lower orbit of Mir

MOSCOW — Hours after announcing the Mir space station will start a slow descent this week in preparation for being discarded, space officials said Monday they lacked money to complete the maneuver now.

The ITAR-Tass news agency initially quoted Viktor Blagov of the Mission Control Center as saying a cargo ship attached to Mir will fire its engines Thursday to lower the station's orbit by nearly four miles.

Several hours later, Blagov was quoted as saying the cargo ship must remain linked to Mir for longer than expected because the space agency cannot afford to send a replacement.

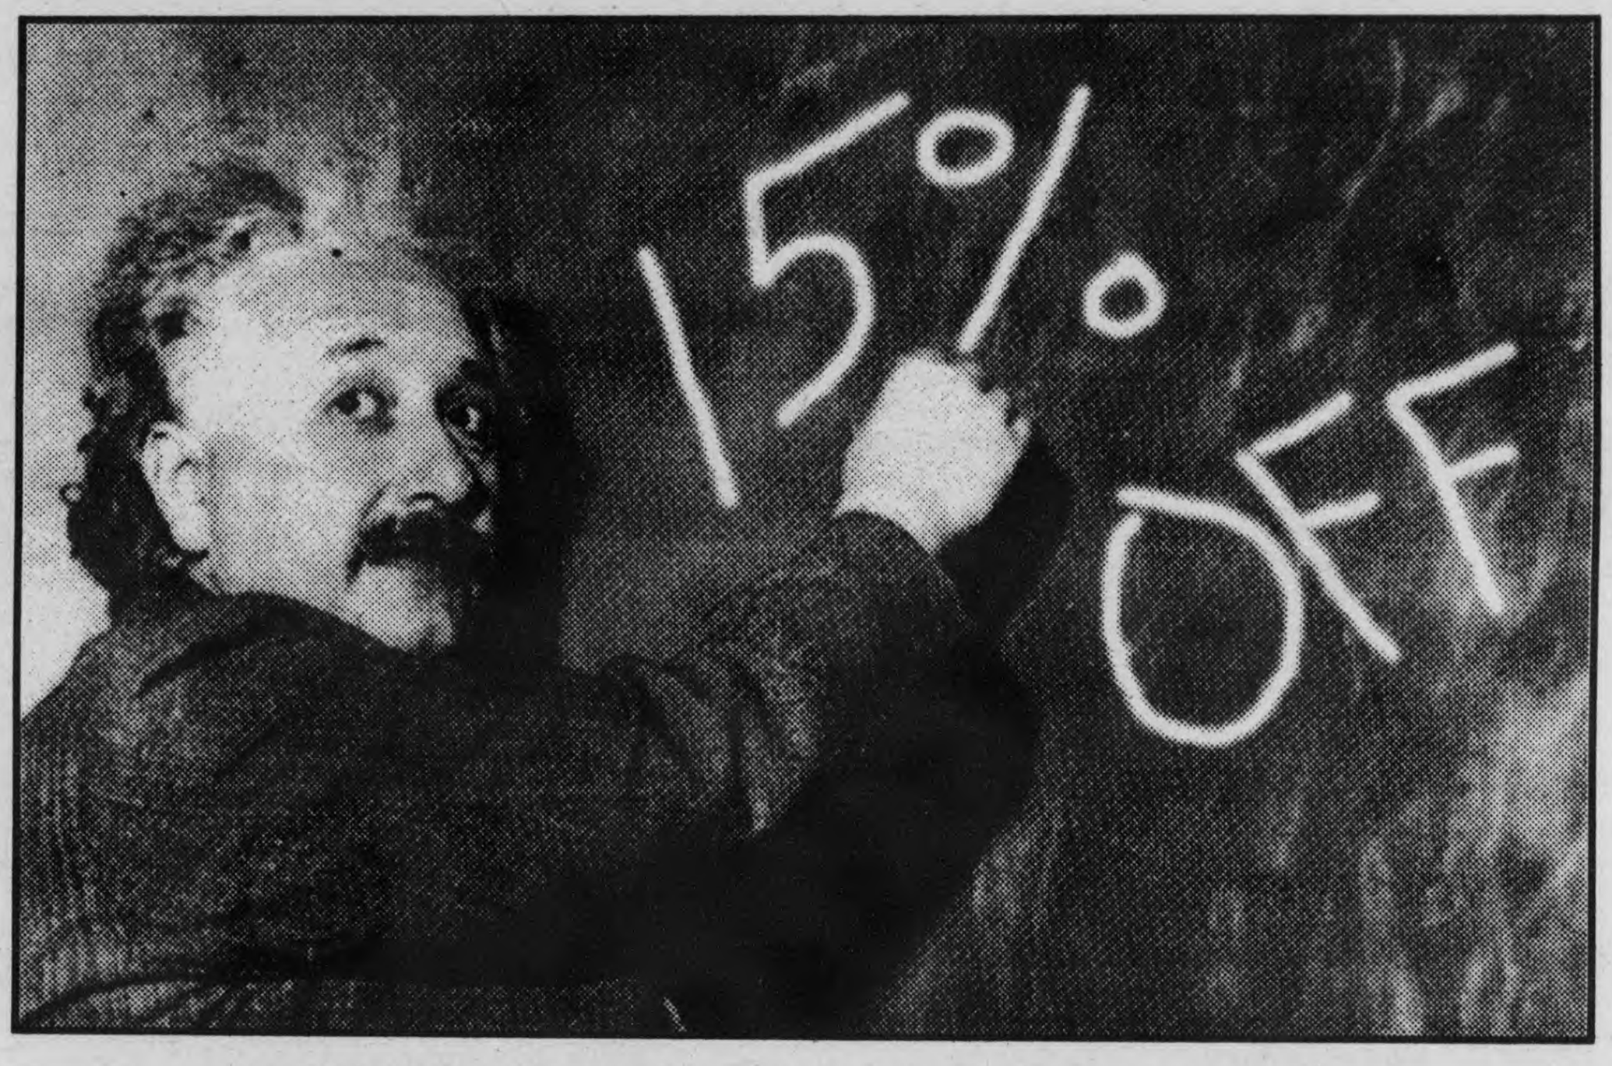
That will use up all the cargo ship's fuel, leaving none for the descent maneuver. Even without the maneuver, Mir likely will lower its orbit to the same degree early next month, Blagov said. The station gradually lowers its orbit whether or not a cargo ship is available to control the maneuver.

A cargo ship due to arrive in September will assist Mir in further lowering its orbit.

If Mir's orbit isn't controlled, the 130-ton station would fall back to Earth within two years on its own and some big pieces could hit populated areas, space officials said.

Mission Control spokesman Valery Lyndin confirmed the maneuver scheduled for Thursday was canceled, but would not comment on the reasons for the decision.

Several cargo ships, docked to Mir one at a time, are supposed to push the space station down from 250 miles above Earth to 75 miles, before it burns up in the atmosphere in December 1999. A few large fragments are likely to fall into the ocean.



The next cargo ship now is scheduled to be launched in September, instead of August.

Yuri Semyonov, head of the state-run RKK Energiya corporation that built Mir and has been running it since it was put in orbit in 1986, has said Russia might be forced to discard the station as early as this fall because of the space industry's desperate cash shortage.

Semyonov said last week that the government owes Energiya $70 million from last year and hasn't paid any bills so far this year.

ACCIDENT

14-year-old struck while riding bike, driver leaves scene of accident

An unidentified driver hit a child on a bicycle Monday evening.

At 5:44 p.m., 14-year-old James Mills was hit on North Manhattan Avenue north of Claflin Road.

Lieutenant Gary Grubbs of the Riley County Police Department said Mills was riding his bicycle south on Manhattan Avenue. He said the vehicle pulled up beside Mills and either collided with him, knocking him over, or pulled in front of him, causing him to lock his brakes and be thrown from the bike onto the pavement.

Grubbs said Mills doesn't know what happened because of his injuries from the accident.

He said Mills was transported to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue with a possible broken nose and abrasions to his shoulders, arms and knees.

Mills was treated and released the same day.

Two people witnessed the accident. Grubbs said they described the vehicle as a white Dodge Ram full-size pickup truck.

The RCPD is investigating the hit-and-run accident and would like anyone who has information about the accident to contact the police station at 537-2112.

EXCAVATING THE FUTURE

Ceremony welcomes business to Manhattan

Jody Johnson
Kansas State Collegian

Amidst a large area of newly leveled ground, a crowd gathered Tuesday to celebrate the groundbreaking of the Sykes Enterprises Manhattan Customer Support Center.

State and local officials were among those in attendance as numerous thanks were given to those who made the venture possible.

The Customer Support Center will cover nearly 42,000 square feet and will be the first of many businesses located in the new Manhattan-Riley County Business Park off Wildcat Creek Road.

Sykes Enterprises will bring 432 jobs to Manhattan. It will create many new career opportunities, as well as broaden the tax base of the community, Mayor Steve Hall said.

"It has and will increase the interests of other business ventures to consider Manhattan and this business park as their future site locations," Hall said.

After congratulating the city of Manhattan and Riley County for their contributions to the business park, Gov. Bill Graves said the state's role in this venture is to be a partner and to aid in attaining the goals, objectives, and dreams of the local community.

"As the governor, I think of this as a groundbreaking for an expanded tax base for city, county, and state government, as a groundbreaking for job opportunities for many, many people," he said.

> "I THINK OF THIS AS A GROUNDBREAKING FOR AN EXPANDED TAX BASE FOR CITY, COUNTY AND STATE GOVERNMENT."

> BILL GRAVES
> governor of Kansas

Graves also said Sykes will serve as a groundbreaking for welfare reform because it will give many people job opportunities. In addition, it will promote better schools, better quality of life and progress for the city and the county, he said.

The president and CEO of Sykes Enterprises, John H. Sykes, was unable to attend the ceremony due to airplane complications, but in a letter addressed to the crowd he acknowledged many people for a job well done.

In the letter, Sykes wrote that the real heroes were the citizens of Manhattan and surrounding communities.

"For without their commitment and belief in themselves and support of their leaders, none of this could be possible," Sykes wrote.

Senior Vice President of Human Resources and Administration for Sykes Enterprises John Bray said the company will be looking for talent in Kansas to fill the hundreds of positions that will be available in mid-management, customer support and human resources.

Sykes will have its first job fair July 10-12. A location has not been determined for the fair, but officials hope to have it on the K-State campus, Bray said.

Sykes will be looking for employees with an understanding of PCs and operating systems to fill the technician jobs.

New employees without computer skills will be trained to fill one of many available positions.

Construction for the Customer Support Center will begin next week, and Sykes plans to begin business this fall, David Timberlake, president of Timberlake Construction, said.

Sykes provides technical support and help-desk services to its clients. It services more than 20 foreign countries and has more than 17 sites in the United States.

It also provides information-technology development services, including software design and development, systems support, and maintenance and foreign-language translation to large corporations.

The initial payroll for the new Manhattan-based business will be between $5 and $7 million, and the company's overall potential financial effect to the Manhattan business community is estimated to be between $10 and $12 million.

Commission takes next step in dog legislation

Angela Kistner
Kansas State Collegian

After numerous complaints brought to the city commission concerning dangerous dogs in Manhattan, the city is considering improvements to an ordinance already in place.

The first reading for the charter ordinance concerning dangerous dogs and an amendment to the present ordinance was approved at the city commission meeting Tuesday night.

William Frost, city attorney, said there have been many complaints about the effectiveness of the current ordinance.

He said one of the problems is that it is difficult for the Manhattan Health Department or Riley County Police Department to seize dangerous dogs from their owners.

The ordinance permits police officers or animal wardens to capture dogs off their property, but they can't go onto property to seize a dog.

The only way the city can seize a dangerous dog from the owner's property is for a police officer to request a court judge to issue a warrant. However, according to Kansas Statutes, the court can't issue these warrants.

The new charter ordinance would permit Municipal Court to issue search warrants in the case of dangerous dogs.

If a dog was seized from the owner's property, it would be impounded until charges were resolved.

Frost said there has also been suggestions that the ordinance should be specific to certain breeds of dogs, but he said there are constitutional problems with this.

Instead, an amendment has been suggested for the present ordinance. The amendment says the city holds the keepers and harborers of certain dogs to have a high standard of care. This would apply to any dog capable of causing life-threatening injuries.

Mayor Steve Hall, along with other city commissioners, said he was concerned about enforcement of the ordinances.

"It's very obvious that we haven't been following through on the enforcement," he said.

Both the RCPD and the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department have the authority to enforce the ordinances related to dangerous dogs, but there are still many complaints that the job isn't getting done.

Charles Murphy, director of the health department, said the health department, the RCPD and the animal wardens don't know who has the responsibility of enforcing the ordinances, even though there has been a written agreement since 1989.

"I find that just unfathomable," Hall said. "In nine years we still don't know who's doing what?"

Hall said as of right now, it is the health department's responsibility to enforce the dangerous-dog ordinance.

Betty Townsend, welfare cruelty investigator for the Riley County Humane Society, said she was concerned about the fairness to the dogs.

"These animals, if they are vicious, they've probably come from the hands of the owner," she said. "You need several witnesses as to how the dog attacked whatever person it bit in the first place.

"Let's make it fair for all concerned," Townsend said.

Ed Klimek, city commissioner, said the key to the ordinances is enforcement.

"If you're having problems with vicious dogs in your neighborhood and haven't found satisfaction, let us know about it."

Rescuers to resume looking for man missing in grain elevator explosion

Associated Press

HAYSVILLE — With grain still smoldering in some of the silos a week after the DeBruce Grain elevator explosion, crews began cutting away pieces of concrete and lowering them to the ground with cranes.

Once the concrete and loose rubble is removed, rescue workers will resume the search for the one man still missing inside the massive complex just south of Wichita, Sedgwick County Fire Division Chief Ken Cox said Monday. He is presumed to be dead.

The bodies of five other grain elevator workers were recovered. Still unaccounted for is Howard Goin, who was leading a work crew in one of four tunnels underneath the elevator when the explosion took place. His body is thought to be in tunnel No. 1, near the unstable headhouse.

"We won't leave until we find Mr. Goin," Cox said.

Meanwhile, family members said a memorial service for Goin will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday in the Campus High School Auditorium.

A 10-man crew from Belger Cartage Service Inc. used a 65-ton conventional crane and two 50-ton hydraulic cranes to lift workers in a metal basket to the top of the 120-foot elevator Monday. Firefighters finished a series of inspections while a Belger crew started removing debris.

"They are going to start trying to remove some of the debris around the headhouse so we can get in there and knock it down," said Kurt Myers, sales representative for Belger.

Cox said the chunks weighed from 500 pounds to several tons. Even small pieces of concrete could be deadly, he said.

"If a block 20 feet off the ground were to fall on somebody's head, it would kill them," he said.

When there is no longer a threat of falling debris, crews will go to work on a section of blocked tunnel near the headhouse. That tunnel was the last place the four men, including Goin, were known to be working, Cox said.

Elementary students win technology awards, travel to Washington, D.C.

Danica Coto
Kansas State Collegian

Four Bluemont Elementary students went to Washington, D.C., last week to accept awards from the ExploraVision competition.

Margaret Thomas, Phillip Kuehl, Benjamin Stark-Sachs and Jamon John won awards for creating the best way to improve technology.

The four first-grade students met for 30 minutes daily for three months and came up with the winning idea of a device that would open a door after identifying a person through DNA found in hair. The children said they got the idea from being unable to open the door to the library when their hands were full of books.

Cindy Garwick, member of the National Science Teachers Association, directed the ExploraVision program sponsored by Toshiba at Bluemont Elementary.

"The people at Toshiba believe we need to give children the ability to dream, think and invent. They need to learn it at a young age," Garwick said.

This is the second time one of Garwick's teams has received this honor.

"In March, we were among the 48 teams chosen out of 5,000," Garwick said. "We were then among the 12 chosen teams that range from kindergarten to sixth grade."

Garwick said winning is great, but the real benefit is the science the children learn. ExploraVision encourages students to visualize technology 20 years into the future. Participating students identify technology that surrounds them and come up with ways to improve it.

"The parents are a big, big part of this," Garwick said. "The students go home and work there, too."

The four students had to write 10-page papers analyzing the positive and negative effects of technology, as well as its history and future. Garwick said the children missed lunch with their friends, recess and even met during and after school.

"There were a number of things they gave up to achieve this," Garwick said.

The children said visiting Washington , D.C., was the highlight of their learning experience. The four students attended the awards ceremony on June 11 and received a $5,000 savings bond given by the Toshiba CEO. Thomas and Stark-Sachs memorized their speeches for the awards ceremony. Garwick said she was impressed that first-graders did not need notecards to read from, unlike older students.

Skip Davis, Kuehl's father, said he was impressed by other competing groups.

"I thought it was really nice how the other groups respected them," Davis said.

Rebecca Stark, Stark-Sachs' mother, said she regretted not taping her son's most impressive moment.

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

BLUEMONT ELEMENTARY SCHOOL STUDENTS BENJAMIN STARK-SACHS (LEFT), MARGARET THOMAS (MIDDLE), PHILLIP KUEHL (RIGHT) AND JAMON JOHN (NOT PICTURED) WON AWARDS IN THE EXPLORAVISION COMPETITION FOR COMING UP WITH THE BEST WAY TO IMPROVE TECHNOLOGY. THE GROUP'S IDEA WAS CALLED "DNA DOOR OPENER."

"The thing I thought he did the best, the acceptance speech, wasn't on tape," Stark said.

On Friday, the students met with the news media, and on Saturday night they took a trolley ride through Washington's lit monuments. The students said the best part was the Metro.

"It was fun, lots of fun," Stark-Sachs said.

"It was awesome," Kuehl said.

Garwick said K-State provides excellent support for the program.

"There is a great partnership between K-State and our school district," Garwick said.

NEWS BITES

MILWAUKEE — First it was meat. Then fur. Now animal rights protesters are incensed over the Oscar Mayer Wienermobile.

Activists for People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals have targeting the huge motorized vehicle over the misery that pigs endure.

The Wienermobile — a huge motorized hot dog that travels around promoting Oscar Mayer's packaged meat products — is due for an appearance at Racine, Wi., Zoo on Aug. 18 as part of a nationwide talent search.

Youngsters will compete for a $20,000 college scholarship, a family vacation to Orlando, Fla., and a chance to be in a TV commercial, singing about how great it would be to be an Oscar Mayer wiener.

Children might think twice about participating if they knew the "living hell" that pigs go through, Bruce G. Friedrich, of PETA, said.

"It is utter misery for these animals from the moment they are born to the moment they are slaughtered," said Friedrich, vegetarian campaign coordinator for PETA in Norfolk, Va.

Racine Zoo Director Jay Christie said Monday it would be "premature" to say whether the zoo would be swayed by PETA's request to cancel the event.

MADISON, Wis. — A man was busted for stealing a taxi after a woman he picked up and drove later complained to the cab company about his driving. She also said she thought something was strange when he didn't know how much to charge her.

The 30-year-old Madison man was being held Monday night on charges of car theft, drunken driving and operating a vehicle after his license was suspended.

Police said he was arrested while driving the stolen cab early Sunday.

Tom Royston, operations manager at Badger Cab, said the cab was stolen from the company's lot.

Doctors disciplined for sex offense, many still practice

CHICAGO — More doctors have been disciplined for sex-related offenses in recent years, but nearly half of them have been allowed to return to practice, researchers said.

The number of disciplinary actions taken against physicians for sex-related offenses increased from 42 in 1989 to 147 in 1996, according to the study in Monday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

More than 25 percent of the disciplinary orders restricted the doctor's licenses or called for probation. Nearly 40 percent of doctors disciplined during the period studied were allowed to return to practice as of March 1997.

The study's authors said more should be done by organizations that certify doctors to ensure that misconduct is dealt with appropriately.

"The majority of people don't know they are going to doctors who have committed sexual offenses," said the study's lead researcher, Dr. Sidney M. Wolfe of the Public Citizen's Health Research Group in Washington, D.C.

Of the 761 physicians disciplined for sexual offenses between 1981 and 1996, 75 percent of the cases involved patients, including instances of rape and trading sexual favors for drugs, Wolfe said. The remaining cases involved non-patients, including office staff.

Doctors disciplined for sex-related offenses were more likely to practice psychiatry, obstetrics and gynecology and family and general practice.

"Those specialties happen to be the ones more likely to know of their patients' problems across the board," Wolfe said. "The patients tell doctors what is wrong with the family, and in the case of women, what's wrong in their relationships with their husbands. These practitioners can turn the woman into a target."

Balcony collapses, killing 15 in India

NEW DELHI, India — A balcony collapsed under the weight of villagers watching a wedding in eastern India, killing at least 15 people and injuring 33 others, United News of India said Tuesday.

Nearly 60 people had crowded the balcony Monday night in Biharsharif, a town 40 miles southeast of Patna, the capital of Bihar state.

Eight people were hospitalized with serious injuries, Rishikesh Prasad Srivastava, the top district official, said.

Victims face Kinkel at arraignment

Associated Press

EUGENE, Ore. — Standing before a judge and some of those he's accused of shooting, 15-year-old Kip Kinkel listened Tuesday to dozens of charges against him for a rampage that left his parents and two classmates dead.

"He's going to pay for what he did," said Nichole Buckholtz, a 17-year-old who suffered a gunshot wound to the leg. "Seeing him in handcuffs showed he wasn't so powerful. On May 21, he held the lives of everyone in the cafeteria in his hands. Now he's helpless. He's not so big and bad."

Kinkel, wearing a white polo shirt over a bulletproof vest, answered softly, "yes," when asked if his name and birthdate were correct on the indictment. His attorneys were granted more time before entering a plea.

When the three-minute arraignment was over, the freckle-faced defendant was turned toward the packed courtroom gallery to be handcuffed.

Most of the hearing was taken up with Judge Jack Mattison reading the list of charges, stemming from the day before the shooting, when Kinkel was arrested with a gun at school.

Hours after he was released to his schoolteacher parents, he allegedly shot them to death, went to Springfield's Thurston High cafeteria and fired his rifle from the hip, killing two classmates and wounding 22 others.

Kinkel faces four counts of aggravated murder, 26 counts of attempted aggravated murder, six counts of first-degree assault, 18 counts of second-degree assault, unlawful possession of a firearm, unlawful manufacture of a destructive device, possession of a destructive device and first-degree theft.

If convicted of the adult charges, he could face life behind bars. Under Oregon law, juveniles cannot get the death penalty.

No date was set for the next hearing. Kinkel was taken back to a juvenile detention center where he is being detained without bond under a suicide watch.

Ku Klux Klan plans rally in town of murder

Associated Press

JASPER, Texas — The Ku Klux Klan plans a rally next week in this town trying to recover from the killing of a black man who was chained to a pickup truck and dragged 2 1/2 miles until his body was torn to pieces.

Three white men are suspects.

The rally outside the county courthouse is scheduled for June 27. No parade permit was necessary, City Attorney Gary Gatlin said.

"They said 'we're going to give you the assurance we're not wanting to bring any guns, we're not going to use the n-word, we're not going to be doing anything to incite riots or anything like that,'" he said.

Authorities said they expect at least 20 Klansmen to participate in their white hoods and robes.

"I don't want them coming," Sheriff Billy Rowles said Tuesday. "Hopefully, no one in Jasper will come to their rally."

Gatlin said he was told by organizers that the purpose of the rally is to disavow any connection with three white suspects in the June 7 death of James Byrd Jr.

"They indicated they want to be here to state that they are not a part of their organization. They do not condone what they have done," Gatlin said.

Organizer Michael Lowe of Waco did not immediately return a telephone call Tuesday.

More than 500 people attended a service Monday to remember Byrd and pray for unity. Byrd, 49, was beaten, then chained to the truck by his ankles and dragged to his death along a country road June 7.

The three white suspects are believed to have ties to white-supremacist groups. Byrd apparently was targeted because he was black.

Byrd was buried Saturday after a funeral that attracted Jesse Jackson and NAACP President Kweisi Mfume.

"I just wish it would all go away," 21-year-old Lucy Luetkemeyer said at Monday's service, led by ministers striving to bring together the racially mixed east Texas town of 8,000.

Au pair to return home following court ruling made Tuesday

Associated Press

BOSTON — The state's highest court cleared the way Tuesday for Louise Woodward to go home to England, upholding a judge's ruling that freed the au pair convicted of killing a baby.

The parents of Matthew Eappen immediately slapped Woodward with a wrongful-death lawsuit aimed at keeping the 20-year-old woman from profiting from the story.

But prosecutors said they plan no further appeals in the 16-month-old case that divided public opinion on both sides of the Atlantic and stirred debate over working moms and affordable child care.

"She killed that little boy," District Attorney Tom Reilly said. "I want her out of this country."

In November, Superior Court Judge Hiller B. Zobel reduced a jury's second-degree murder conviction to manslaughter and sentenced Woodward to the 279 days she had served since her arrest.

Prosecutors asked the high court to reinstate the verdict and its mandatory 15-year prison sentence. Defense lawyers asked the court to either overturn the conviction or uphold Zobel's ruling. In the meantime, Woodward was ordered to remain in Massachusetts.

Driver shows cowardice, irresponsibility after accident

Someone is battling a guilty conscience this week, and well, they should be.

On Monday, a 14-year-old boy was hit by a truck while riding his bike on North Manhattan Avenue north of Claflin Road; the driver of the vehicle left the scene of the accident before police arrived.

Cowardice does not even begin to describe this action. In addition to being a crime, leaving the scene of an accident, especially one involving a child, is deplorable.

Thankfully, the boy was treated and released from the hospital the same day, but his summer surely is not going to be the same.

Two witnesses to the crime have come forward and given the police information. They should be applauded for their role in trying to solve this crime.

Hopefully, the driver of the truck also will come forward. Accidents happen, but part of being an adult and a driver of an automobile is to know when to take responsibility for your actions.

Let this be a warning to everyone driving around campus this summer — there are many more children on bicycles and on foot at K-State than usual.

Summer camps, families here for orientation and children making their way across campus to get to summertime activities mean more younger folks than usual.

Children aren't as attentive as adults, and drivers need to be extra careful, perhaps thinking of campus and the surrounding area as one big school zone.

Drivers need to slow down and be aware of their surroundings.

This accident might have been preventable.

Anyone who may have information about this crime should contact the Riley County Police Department at 537-2112.

Flying high one last time

Dynasty ends in a blaze of glory, another championship

Just like all of the sports starved, television addicted, crazed and lunatic fans that watched the end of an era last Sunday night, I stared fixated at my crappy Magnavox, lamenting yet another hero that has gone the way of the Dodo.

Michael Jordan played what was probably his last basketball game on that already fabled evening in Salt Lake City. And like all fat men who can't even run up a basketball court a single time without the aid of an iron lung, I paused in my daily life and considered the career of the most brilliant hoops player of all time.

Eric Goold

And yes, when Jordan's teammate Scottie Pippen broke down right after the buzzer ended Game 6 and wept a little bit, I may have shed a tear right along with him. But then, I cry over beer commercials.

After I recovered from that admittedly weak emotional collapse, the television screen flashed to His Airness, running around the court amidst the teeming hordes of fans and media who would have given good money just to reach out and touch him right then, and it was time to celebrate.

Defiantly, Jordan thrust six digits in the air, signifying his improbable sixth world championship. That number would be repeated a short time later in the evening, when NBA Commissioner David Stern presented Jordan with his sixth Finals MVP trophy.

I pondered a considerable irony that night as I watched the festivities unfold from the Delta Center: when the Chicago Bulls played for the world championship in their previous five appearances this decade, I rooted adamantly against them. Every year, I loathed them as they rolled through each Western Conference opponent. I can even recall, sickly, a few silent prayers, pleading with God that he might allow the Bulls to be defeated, if for no other reason than to prove that they could be defeated.

Marny Burke/Collegian

The two years that the Houston Rockets won consecutive championships while Jordan went through the motions of a minor league baseball player provided a much needed respite in between two three-peats, total domination, by Chicago's club.

But this year was different. The fact that it was Jordan's twilight reminded me to enjoy it while it lasted, and to give credit where credit is due: Michael Jordan is the best player of all time, and he played on a team whose NBA dynasty will reign supreme over all others.

Bob Costas, as always the best sports broadcaster working today, made several key points describing why this Bulls team is so special in his concluding remarks to Game 6. In an era when players change teams at the drop of a hat (or a dollar) and loyalty is a thing of the past, the core of the Bulls remained the same: Jordan, Pippen, and Coach Phil Jackson. In an era when superstars choke their coaches and turn down $117 million dollar contracts, Michael Jordan played the game because he loved it.

I am a weak and boring man, and because that's true, I believe in heroes. I yearn to find people worthy of adulation, who handle fame with grace and dignity, who demonstrate how to appreciate life.

Before this year, I was never even a fan of Michael Jordan. Those Gatorade commercials would come on, demanding that I, "Be Like Mike," and my bowels would rumble alarmingly.

Before I watched Jordan will himself and his team to yet another championship, defeating a Utah Jazz team that was deeper and more healthy, I would never have called Michael Jordan a hero.

But now, I will. He convinced me.

Curly hair does not make a successful Irish-dance competition

Lift-two-three-four-five, lift-two-three-four-five, point-point-back, up-two-three-four-five, lift-two-three-four-five.

That was what was in my head all of last weekend. There was one point where I would've preferred to have a knife in my skull rather than the above dance, but so it goes when one attends their first Irish dance competition at the ripe old age of 19.

When I started taking Irish dance classes through UFM last January, I had no idea it would end with me bouncing on a plywood stage and being intimidated by 12-year-olds in a place called Floyds Knob, Ind. That's right — Floyds Knob.

It's called a feis (pronounced fesh), and I guess it's a big deal. The night before, girls twist their hair into these things that kind of look like the Styrofoam water noodles kids beat each other over the head with at public pools.

The result is hair that is an out-of-control kind of curly. Then they wiggle their way into ornate velvet Irish costumes, pull their socks half way up their legs, strap on their shoes and wait until it's their turn to dance.

Because my hair is already an out-of-control kind of curly, I figured it was a good sign. However, my outfit was a Grandma's Trunk/Wal-Mart kind of affair, and the dances I prepared were about the same caliber as these little girls' warm-up exercises. But I was a beginner, so not much more really could be expected of me.

Brandi Hertig

Not only was I a beginner, but an adult beginner, so I was spared the humiliation of sharing the stage with 5-year-olds. It was just me, my UFM classmate and two women from Georgia with decidedly blue frocks, traditional cape-type things flapping off the backs and all. They both had been to other feises. Ellen and I had not.

The first dance we had to do was the reel. The four of us lined up on stage when I realized I had no idea what the protocol was for this sort of thing. We had to perform two at a time, even though there were only four of us. Ellen and one of the Georgia women went first. When it was my turn to go, I immediately became distracted by the other woman's flapping and bouncing (which I think really builds my case for attention-deficit disorder). When the same woman scampered up to Ellen and I to tell us one of us got first and the other got fourth, I knew it was going to be a long day.

Much of the day was spent waiting, which allowed me to be witness to the elation and the agony that these kinds of competitions bring about. Proud parents walked around with the medals their children had earned that day pinned to their shirts. Other comforted their sobbing daughters with words like, "That's really bizarre, honey. I think the judge must have missed you when you danced." Most of the time it was the parents, not the children, who all were whipped into a frantic tizzy.

When it was time for us to do the jig, I remembered to smile at the judge and ignore the woman next to me. Still, the fact that someone was staring at me was a little unnerving. And my ego couldn't help but be injured by all the girls prancing about, throwing out steps I don't think my goofy body would ever let me do.

By the end of the day, I was an advanced beginner in two of the three dances in which I competed (placing fourth in the reel didn't really help me move up with that dance).

Gracefulness and I really don't mix, and I'm not sure if I'm even Irish. I think my next dancing adventure will lead to me busting some breakdancing moves on a piece of cardboard in City Park. But then again, the thought of having the tunes of The Sugar Hill Gang in my head sounds about as appealing as that knife.

GERMAN MEASLES

27 cases of German measles now confirmed

LIBERAL, Kan. — Twenty-seven cases of highly contagious German measles have been confirmed at Kansas meat-packing plants in the past six weeks, and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment said that number is still rising.

The outbreak started in Dodge City in early May, and cases since have been reported in Ford, Finney, Cowley, Sedgwick and Gray counties, Kansas Department of Health and Environment spokesman Don Brown said.

"The possibility of anything widespread or out of control is pretty remote," Brown said. "There are people who aren't protected, and it is passing from person to person, so we will continue following it until it is stopped."

Among communicable diseases, the symptoms from German measles are fairly mild, Brown said. The largest concern is the risk the virus poses to pregnant women and its potential for causing birth defects, he said.

Most Americans were immunized as children against the airborne virus, known as rubella, but about 10 percent of the population, particularly older adults and Mexican immigrants, are unprotected and at risk, Brown said.

"It's definitely controllable," Brown said. "We got a very early jump on it."

Eight thousand doses of rubella vaccine have been sent to south central and southwest Kansas to help prevent the spread, and immunization clinics have been set up at several meat-packing plants, Brown said.

Rubella is passed through human contact the way a common cold virus is passed, he said. It is not spread through food.

The meat-packing plants have seen so many cases because the plants have a high number of Hispanic workers and they often have several members of the family working at one plant, Brown said.

In many of the reported cases, those who contracted the virus were members of the same family, worked with one another or carpooled to work, Brown said.

The symptoms of German measles include rashes, slight fever and swollen glands.

Anonymous K-State graduate repays bookstore

Danica Coto
Kansas State Collegian

When students graduate, they begin to pay back the loans they used to pay for school. Some students even pay back the unauthorized loans.

An anonymous graduate reimbursed the K-State Student Union Bookstore with a $360 money order for items he shoplifted during the 1989-90 school year.

Kay Farley, associate Union director of bookstore/retail authorization, received the sealed envelope and an attached letter explaining the reasons behind his actions.

"It was a very pleasant surprise," Farley said. "It's nice when people make a mistake and make the wrong right."

Farley said the bookstore has experienced shoplifting in the past, but no one has reimbursed them for it.

"I have had people take things out of necessity, anger and feeling that it's their right," Farley said. "But they are not stealing from me or the bookstore, they're stealing from the students."

K-State students were reimbursed this time, though. The money order was signed Rich D. and sent to Farley, who put the money into Union operation. Rich outlined in the letter the items he shoplifted and also paid for their accumulated interest.

"Please accept this payment as restitution for a wrong done and a crime committed," Rich wrote. "K-State was good to me. Allow me the right to give to the institution what it deserves.

Citing Jesus Christ as the main reason for restitution of his crime, Rich also wrote he needed time to pay off credit card debts.

According to the letter, Rich promised Jesus Christ he would pay for the stolen items.

Religion also played an important part in a similar event regarding the TCI Cable Company. They received cash from an anonymous K-State graduate who said he was inspired by God.

A letter and $300 in cash was sent to TCI Cable Company about three weeks ago. Richard Cofer, TCI General Manager, said he was surprised.

"I was obviously gratified that there are still people out there that, when they do something wrong, they make the restitution," Cofer said.

The unidentified student was a sophomore at K-State in 1993; during this time, the student shared cable with the upstairs apartment.

"Unfortunately, this was very wrong," the letter stated. "I have recently taken a very big step and have decided to 'live my life for the right reasons.'"

According to the letter, the student said he was going through a process of repentance and was required to go back through his past and correct all the things he had done wrong.

"When I feel that I am at peace, I will give my testimony and Lord willing, will be baptized and look forward to serving God in the rest of my time here on earth," the student wrote.

"Whatever the person's motivation is, it's not for me to question," Cofer said.

The money was donated to Crime Stoppers of Manhattan to prevent crimes.

Ms. Kay Farley
K-State Student Union Bookstore
820 K-State Student Union
Manhattan, KS 66506

Dear Ms. Farley:

I am writing to inform you that your establishment was a victim of shoplifting in the fall of 1989, the spring of 1990, and the fall of 1990. While you may not have been responsible for the success of the KSU Bookstore during this time, I write to make restitution and payment for the items stolen.

You are probably wondering why, after nine years, do I bother correcting this wrong and crime. Allow me to briefly share the reasons. I was a student at KSU at that time, and did many foolish things in college; one of which was stealing. First and foremost, I am now a whole hearted follower of Jesus Christ, and believe that if I can make right a wrong done or sin, then it is my obedient responsibility to do so. Second, it has taken me several years to pay off credit card debt since college graduation, and I now have the financial resources to pay for the items that I stole. Third, I promised my Lord Jesus Christ, that if the resources were at my disposal, I would pay for the items stolen from the various establishments in which they were taken. Yours is one of several letters I will be writing.

The items stolen from the KSU Bookstore consisted of many things: one algebra book, one airbrush paint set, a pastel color chalk set, ellipse drawing templates, pencils, markers, drafting pens, erasers, and other miscellaneous items. I believe the total theft, including interest, amounts to $360.00 dollars.

Enclosed in the attached envelope you will find a money order for the items stolen. Please accept this payment as restitution for a wrong done and a crime committed. I entrust to you that this payment will be returned to your establishment, appropriately. I am an alumni, and glad of my university's name, heritage, and of my good years there. K-State was good to me. Allow me the right to give to the institution what it deserves. Put this to good use in the scholarship fund, athletic fund, or anywhere else it is needed.

Whether you consider this letter foolishness or not, I was wrong. Thank you for taking time out to read this letter.

Sincerely,

Rich D.

P.S. Please understand why I won't give my full name. Thanks.

Experts say false-fat food useful in control of obesity, diabetes

Associated Press

RESTON, Va. — Potato chips made with phony fat are useful in treating obesity and diabetes, a group of doctors, researchers and patients told a federal advisory panel.

But several consumers told the Food and Drug Administration advisory committee Tuesday the fake-fat chips caused bloating, diarrhea and nausea.

The committee of experts who evaluate food safety for the FDA heard testimony related to a potato chip, sold under the name Wow, made with an artificial fat called olestra. It tastes like normal fat but is not absorbed by the body and, thus, contributes no fat calories to the diet.

The FDA approved olestra in 1996 on the condition that Procter & Gamble, which makes the fat, and Frito-Lay, which manufacturers and sells the chips, report on any adverse health effects. The potato-chip packages also were required to carry a label warning of possible gastrointestinal effects from eating the product.

The advisory board will conclude its work today after considering possible changes in the warning label.

An advocacy group called the Center for Science in the Public Interest contends people have suffered from diarrhea, excess gas, bloating and nausea after eating the chips. The organization has opposed olestra from the start.

CSPI experts also have said that olestra in the diet tends to rid the body of some nutrients, such as carotenoids. CSPI experts were allowed to participate in the discussion.

A parade of witnesses, including two former secretaries of the Department of Health and Human Services, said olestra offers a way for obese people and patients with diabetes to help control weight.

Former HHS secretary Dr. Otis Bowen said he surveyed emergency rooms and physicians in Indiana and found no evidence of olestra causing medical problems.

"The product causes no significant health risks," Bowen said. "I eat the chips and so do my grandchildren."

Dr. Louis Sullivan, another former HHS secretary, said too many Americans are obese and olestra gives them "another tool to improve their lifestyle and overall health."

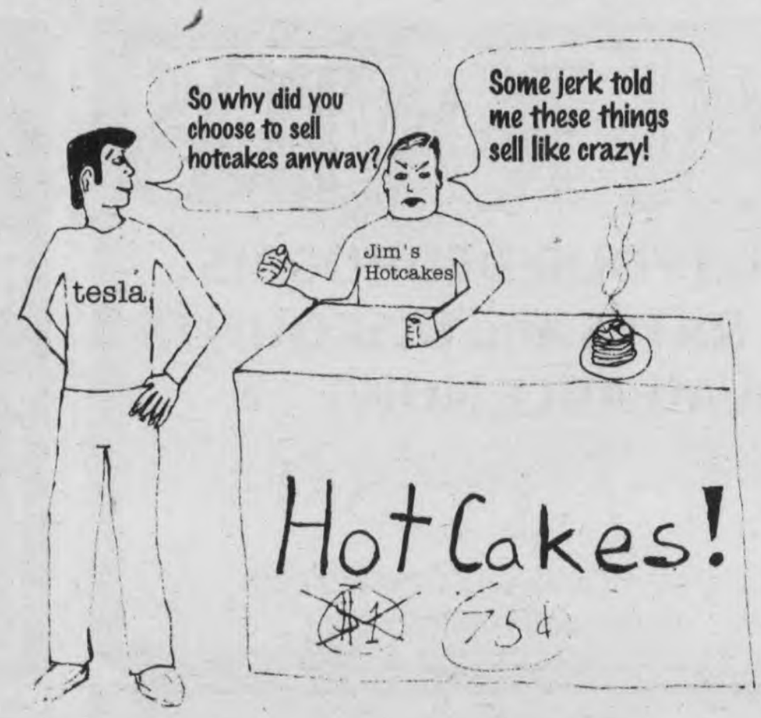
Both Bowen and Sullivan said they had received some financial support from Procter & Gamble.

Several diabetics, who said they were appearing at the hearing independently, lauded the potato chips for helping them control weight.

"I am able to snack on chips because of olestra," said Mary Ball of Washington, D.C. "I haven't experienced any of the problems mentioned on the warning label."

However, at least four witnesses, some supported by CSPI, said the chips had made them ill.

A woman identifying herself only as Mary Ann of Germantown, Md., said that after eating three handfuls of chips over three days she experienced diarrhea for three weeks, lost 10 pounds and "was as miserable as you can imagine."



She said she had not read the warning label because "never in my wildest dreams did I imagine that I needed to read a warning label on potato chips."

Dr. Mark Brown of Harvard, who also was sponsored by CSPI, said that eating olestra could lead to more cases of cancer because the fake fat would block the absorption of nutrients such as carotenoids. Brown said that carotenoids protect against cancer.

Dr. John Vanderveen of the FDA, however, disputed that, saying there is no evidence that carotenoids protect against cancer or heart disease.

And Dr. Thomas Wilcox of the FDA said a study of blood from olestra users indicate that there was no significant change in carotenoid levels, that cholesterol levels improved and that the amount of vitamin K actually increased.

Conservative starts online news operation

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Contending the television networks have ignored "scandals oozing from the Clinton White House," conservative L. Brent Bozell III is launching his own news operation on the Internet.

Bozell, chairman of the conservative media-watchdog group Media Research Center, said Tuesday that his Conservative News Service will be an online operation reporting news that is "under-reported or ignored by the network media."

Newspapers have done a good job "reporting the seemingly endless string of scandals oozing from the Clinton White House," Bozell said. "I cannot say the same for television news. Night after night, important stories are barely covered, if mentioned at all."

He said citizens are left in the dark because most Americans get their news from television.

"The only story, Clinton scandal, that has been reported comprehensively is the Monica Lewinsky story, because it's sex," he said, speaking of the former White House intern who is being investigated about whether she had an affair with the president and then was encouraged to lie about it.

With a staff of four reporters and two editors, the Conservative News Service will operate on $1.7 million in donations this year.

In addition to its own stories, the service will carry those by mainstream media outlets, and it will not have a solely conservative spin, Bozell said. "We're going to be fair."

Tower gets 'suspenders'

PISA, Italy — Pisa's Leaning Tower should be wearing a new pair of supporting steel "suspenders" by October, experts said Tuesday, but it is too early to say when it will be safe to make the dizzying climb up the monument.

Work has started to stretch 340-foot cables from the tower to anchors around the tower square, said Michele Jamiolkowski, head of the international committee of experts overseeing the Pisa propping-up project.

Jamiolkowski said it was premature to say when the tower might be reopened to the public. The tower — already leaning some 13 feet off the perpendicular — was closed to tourists in 1990 for fear it might topple over completely.

Safety important during tornadoes

BUSINESSES PROVIDE SAFE PLACES FOR SHOPPERS, RESIDENTS MUST PAY ATTENTION TO WARNINGS

Lynette Abitz
Kansas State Collegian

Summer is here, and in Kansas that means tornado season is in full bloom.

April, May and June are prime months for tornadoes. Kansas, Texas and Oklahoma make up Tornado Alley, one of the hardest-hit areas of the country, with Kansas ranking third among these states for number of tornadoes per square mile.

Jim Phillips, a weather forecaster for KSNT-TV News in Topeka, said it is important to remember there is no set rule for what conditions can trigger a tornado. Normal conditions consist of warm humid air with winds usually from the southeast.

It is important to be attentive to weather forecasts during thunderstorms.

Phillips said tornado watches are issued for large areas when conditions are favorable for a tornado. Warnings are issued when radar or spotters have seen a funnel cloud. They can be pinpointed down to an area as small as a county.

Several sirens are dispersed around Manhattan to warn residents of dangerous weather.

"We just don't use them for tornadoes," Pat Collins, emergency management coordinator for Riley County said. "If there is severe weather that is going to cause injury, we use them."

Collins said the sirens essentially are used as outdoor warning devices.

There are 28 sirens in the county. Each siren is tested from 10:20 to 11:30 a.m. the first Monday of every month. Newer sirens cover a one-mile radius. Older sirens cover a half-mile radius. Two sirens are on the K-State campus, on Durland and Bluemont Halls. There is also a siren at Jardine Terrace Apartments. Collins said accuracy of the sirens depends upon the National Weather Service.

Residents should take cover after hearing the sirens. Not everyone has a basement to go to, so Phillips said people should go to a small interior room in their house, preferably in the center of the house. He said they should then crouch under something heavy, such as a pool table. The same goes for those who live in apartment complexes. Residents of mobile homes should seek shelter elsewhere.

> "DON'T WORRY ABOUT SHUTTING THE WINDOWS. THE TORNADO IS GOING TO BLOW THEM OUT ANYWAY."
> JIM PHILLIPS
> KSNT-TV NEWS in Topeka

Phillips said avoid the old wives' tale about cracking your windows to avoid pressure.

"Don't worry about shutting the windows. The tornado is going to blow them out anyway," he said.

If someone is caught on the road, Phillips said not to outrun the storm unless it's far enough away. Instead, he said get out of the car. Find the lowest place possible, such as a ditch. In the early 1990s, a group of people from Wichita took cover under a highway overpass and were saved from the tornado. Phillips said that is a good place to take cover.

Manhattan shoppers can find shelter if they are at the Manhattan Town Center during a tornado or severe weather. Andy Carlson, general manager of the mall, said it has an extensive procedure for severe weather situations.

Staff rely on pagers tapped into the local weather service. A severe weather team hands out fliers to store owners. The fliers have detailed instructions on what they need to do to secure their stores. Service corridors serve as shelters. Signs are posted at each shelter, as well as severe weather kits. Each kit contains a transistor radio, mall communications device, flashlight and first-aid kit.

Shoppers are allowed to leave if they want to, but the mall can't be responsible for their decision.

"Once they're out, they're out," Carlson said.

The K-State Student Union also has procedures to assure safety. Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said the area of refuge is in the downstairs recreation area. Employees on duty move people downstairs and try to stay away from glass. If there isn't enough room in the recreation area, the second area of refuge is Union Station.

Agencies receive grants to improve child-care services

Associated Press

TOPEKA — The state Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services has awarded a total of $4 million in grants to 90 public or non-profit agencies in hopes of improving child care services.

SRS announced the grants Tuesday, noting that the amount awarded is more than double the $1.8 million awarded in 1996. The federal government increased spending on child care as part of its efforts to encourage people on welfare to go to work.

"Affordable and good quality child care is a must, whether for families who have been on public assistance trying to move into the work force or for families trying to make ends meet on a low income," said SRS Secretary Rochelle Chronister.

The largest grant, $1.24 million, went to the Kansas Association of Child Care Resource and Referral, a non-profit group that serves as a clearinghouse for information about child care.

Another group, Kansas Child Care Training Opportunities, received nearly $251,000. The Dotson Community Center in Junction City received more than $119,000 and the Kansas Children's Service League received about $108,000.

Manhattan, K-State offer ways to beat summer heat

Cait Purinton
Kansas State Collegian

Kansas summer heat can be hard to handle. During the summer various activities are offered citywide and campus-wide to keep people cool and give them something to do at the same time.

Robin Leaper, assistant director of the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex, said an advantage of going to the Recreation Complex is air conditioning.

Instead of running outside in the heat, people can run on one of the two indoor tracks.

"It's a little more comfortable to work out inside," Leaper said. "It's always pretty cool in here."

Kim Korte, junior in business, said she plays volleyball at the Recreation Complex and goes walking at night to just relax.

The Recreation Complex offers equipment checkout and a wide range of outdoor and indoor activities like weightlifting, running or racquetball.

Leaper said if people are not enrolled in summer classes at K-State, they must purchase a facility use card at the Recreation Complex.

Monthly rates for passes for students and faculty are $10 for a Recreation Complex pass, $5 for a pass to the pool at the Natatorium and $13.50 for a combination Recreation Complex and pool pass. K-State alumni can purchase a Recreation Complex pass for $20, a pool pass for $10 an the combination pass for $27.

The general public is not able to buy passes for the Recreation Complex or Natatorium.

Lap swimming, water basketball, water jogging and water aerobics are available at the Natatorium. Water basketball does not have organized times, so people can form teams and play at any time.

Water-aerobics classes started Tuesday. They are from 7 to 8 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays and at noon on Wednesdays.

Sign-ups for the water workouts are available at the Rec Complex.

The K-State Student Union has bowling lanes and pool tables downstairs available for student and public use.

Derek Tingstrom, junior in English, said that when it gets to be 99 degrees outside, it is hard to do anything outside and keep cool.

He said bowling in the Union would be a good idea because it's always cold downstairs.

Shanna Hix, freshman in religious education, said she works all day, so by the time she gets off work at the K-State Union Bookstore, it is already cooling off outside. So, she suggested running through the sprinklers on campus as a way to stay cool during the day.

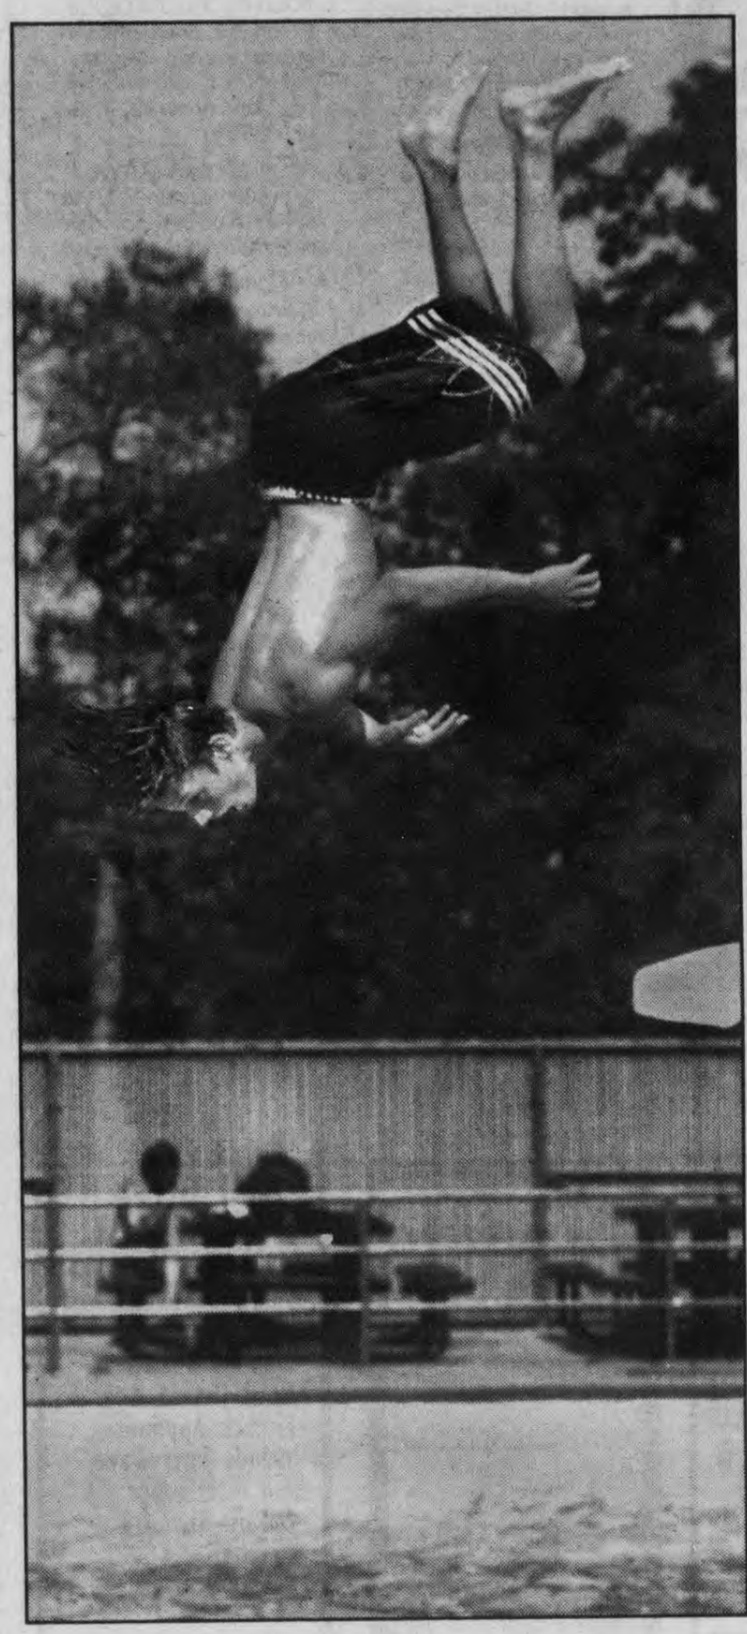
Tuttle Creek State Park has many opportunities for summer activities, including fishing, boating and skiing.

Tuttle Creek is host to a number of events, including Country Stampede.

They also sponsor water-safety events, clinics, volleyball tournaments and fishing derbies. This weekend it will be co-host to a boating-safety school with Brooks Yamaha.

Park Manager Todd Lovin said the park consists of five different state parks around Tuttle Creek.

He said the most popular site is the River Pond Area. People can camp, play at the playgrounds, bird watch, play volleyball or barbecue at the shelters.



Boat ramps and fishing are available at the River Pond Area.

If people want to ski, they can also go to Tuttle Creek Spillway, the second most popular area at Tuttle Creek.

The Spillway has three boat ramps and the Big Dawg Marina, where people can rent boats or personal water crafts.

Fancy Creek, the third state park that is a part of Tuttle Creek, has hiking paths and horse trails that are being developed at North and South Randolph. North and South Randolph also have fishing access.

Lovin said Tuttle Creek has a lot of fishing activity, while Milford Lake has more water-sports activity because its banks aren't as steep and the water is not as murky.

A 15-YEAR-OLD MANHATTAN RESIDENT SPENDS AN AFTERNOON PRACTICING FLIPS FROM THE LOW DIVE AT THE MANHATTAN CITY POOL LAST SUMMER. THERE ARE FOUR PUBLIC POOLS IN MANHATTAN: CITY PARK, 1220 POYNTZ AVE.; CICO PARK, 3309 ROBINSON; NORTHVIEW PARK, 510 GRIFFITH DR. AND DOUGLASS PARK, 514 S. NINTH ST.

UNTIMELY DEATH

Man dies after blowing hole in boat with firecracker

FOX LAKE, Ill. — A man drowned after he and a friend inadvertently blew a hole in the bottom of their rowboat with a large firecracker.

Daniel Wyman, 29, and his friend had tossed an M-250 firecracker into a lake to kill fish Sunday, said Jim Wipper, chief deputy coroner.

A gust of wind pushed their 14-foot aluminum boat over the firecracker, and the boat sank about 100 yards from shore.

The friend swam to safety.

An M-250 is equivalent to a quarter stick of dynamite.

4 die in collision; police say car was speeding, weaving

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. — Four people died after a collision on Missouri Highway 291 Tuesday afternoon, Independence police said.

A 20-year-old man, the driver of the car that collided with one in which the four victims were riding, was hospitalized.

Witnesses told police that a car traveling at high speeds and weaving in and out of traffic struck the car carrying the four people, two married couples in their 70s, who were killed.

Names had not been released Tuesday night because relatives had not been notified.

"He was driving fast and carelessly for unknown reasons," said Sgt. John Passiglia, of the Independence Police Department.

"We're working toward the highest charge we can get. If we can get involuntary manslaughter, four counts, then that's the way we'll go."

The prosecutor will decide what charges might be filed, Passiglia said. Police had not determined whether the 20-year-old was under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

Three of the victims were dead at the scene, and the other died later at a hospital.

The collision occurred near Interstate 70, in the southern portion of Independence.

The cars collided in the southbound lane of the highway. Traffic in both directions was temporarily limited to one lane.

Rescuer run down by fugitive at scene of auto accident

PLYMOUTH MEETING, Pa. — A man allegedly tried to run down officers in the police-station parking lot, then plowed into a five-vehicle accident, running over a firefighter and drawing police gunfire before being captured.

In a scene captured by TV news cameras, officers dragged the man out of his sport-utility vehicle after it came to a halt on a lawn.

A dazed, weary Luther Harling, 30, of Norristown, was led to his arraignment in a T-shirt with a print of a basketball and the slogan "Game Over."

He was being held on $250,000 bail on a charge of attempted homicide.

Firefighter William Krause, who was at Monday's accident scene trying to help, was in fair condition Tuesday with a broken arm, broken leg and burns.

The mayhem began when Harling fled from Norristown Borough police after attempting to run down two officers in the station's parking lot, Cpl. Jim Hetrick said. Hetrick said he had no further details.

As Harling approached the accident, about three miles from the suburban Philadelphia police station, he slammed on the brakes and crashed into the pileup.

Police said he tried to maneuver around the scene when he struck the 22-year-old firefighter, who was dragged about 20 yards before becoming pinned underneath the front wheels.

Police said they fired about 10 rounds at the sport-utility vehicle. Harling was not hit by any bullets and suffered only minor cuts, police said.

At Harling's arraignment, his father said his son has a brain tumor that can trigger erratic behavior when he consumes drugs or alcohol. Larry Harling said his son had fought with his girlfriend earlier in the day.

"What happened was he got upset. That's what tipped him off," Larry Harling said.

It was not known immediately if Harling had taken drugs or alcohol.

The multivehicle accident occurred about 12:45 p.m, injuring one driver. The driver was in fair to serious condition.

Au pair leaves U.S., returns to Britain

BOSTON — Louise Woodward arrived at the airport with a police escort Wednesday, hours after a federal judge temporarily barred her from spending money earned from selling her story about the death of a baby in her care.

The 20-year-old former au pair did not speak publicly as she hurried past scores of passengers and reporters at Logan International Airport.

Defense lawyer Andrew Good bid his client an emotional goodbye at the airport. Woodward's flight for London took off shortly before 6 p.m.

"She said she would miss us and she's obviously excited to go home," Good said. "I'm relieved and pleased that she's going home."

Earlier in the day, as Woodward prepared to leave the United States, a federal judge issued what could be a largely symbolic order temporarily barring her from spending any money she makes from selling her story.

U.S. District Judge William Young ordered Woodward to notify the court and the family of 8-month-old Matthew Eappen of any contract she signs to profit from her sensational case.

Legal experts said any civil judgment would be tough to enforce in England. The United States and Great Britain have no treaty that would require British authorities to enforce any restrictions against her.

CHEER POWER

Cheerleading camp comes to K-State

Students walking on campus this week might have noticed a different sound in the air besides the chirping of birds and excited chatter of new students going through orientation.

Cheers, chants, music and laughter coming from the residence hall area also could be heard.

The Universal Cheerleading Association cheerleading camp for high school cheerleading squads is taking place at K-State. Seven schools from around Kansas have brought their junior varsity and varsity squads to the camp to learn the basics of cheerleading.

Kevin Clanton, UCA territory manager for Kansas, Colorado and New Mexico, said the cheerleading squads will learn everything from cheers and sidelines to partner stunts.

Partner stunts include two-person stunts, like the shoulder stand or chair, or multiple-person stunts, like the elevator, where two people hold a girl's feet and elevate her to the height of their shoulders or above.

> "EVERYBODY'S PLEASANT WHEN WALKING ON CAMPUS. THEY MAKE US FEEL REALLY AT HOME."
> SUE BRUMMER
> Andale High School cheerleading adviser

Not only do the partner stunts teach the cheerleaders ways to entertain the crowd, but Clanton said the stunts also teach them to use teamwork and to trust each other. The UCA cheerleaders teach the squads safety precautions to prevent injuries and stress the need for a spotter, or person there to catch a girl if she falls, at all times.

Besides learning cheerleading basics, Clanton said the squads learn a lot of fun chants called boogie chants. He said a boogie chant entertains the crowd and gets them involved. Many times the boogie chants are nonsense cheers.

"We just do it to have fun," Clanton said. "But, most squads do them at games. The crowd loves them."

Since Tuesday, the squads have been practicing the new cheers, chants, sidelines, stunts and dances they've been learning. They then will take what they've learned and compete in the camp championship Friday morning.

At the championship, the squads will have a chance to win many different awards, including most-improved-squad award and superior-squad award. Every squad will go home with a trophy or ribbon.

Another part of camp championship is the all-star competition where individual members of a squad do a cheer, chant and dance by themselves. Winners of the competition receive a medallion and participate in different parades.

Sue Brummer, Andale High School cheerleading adviser, said two seniors from her squad will participate in the competition.

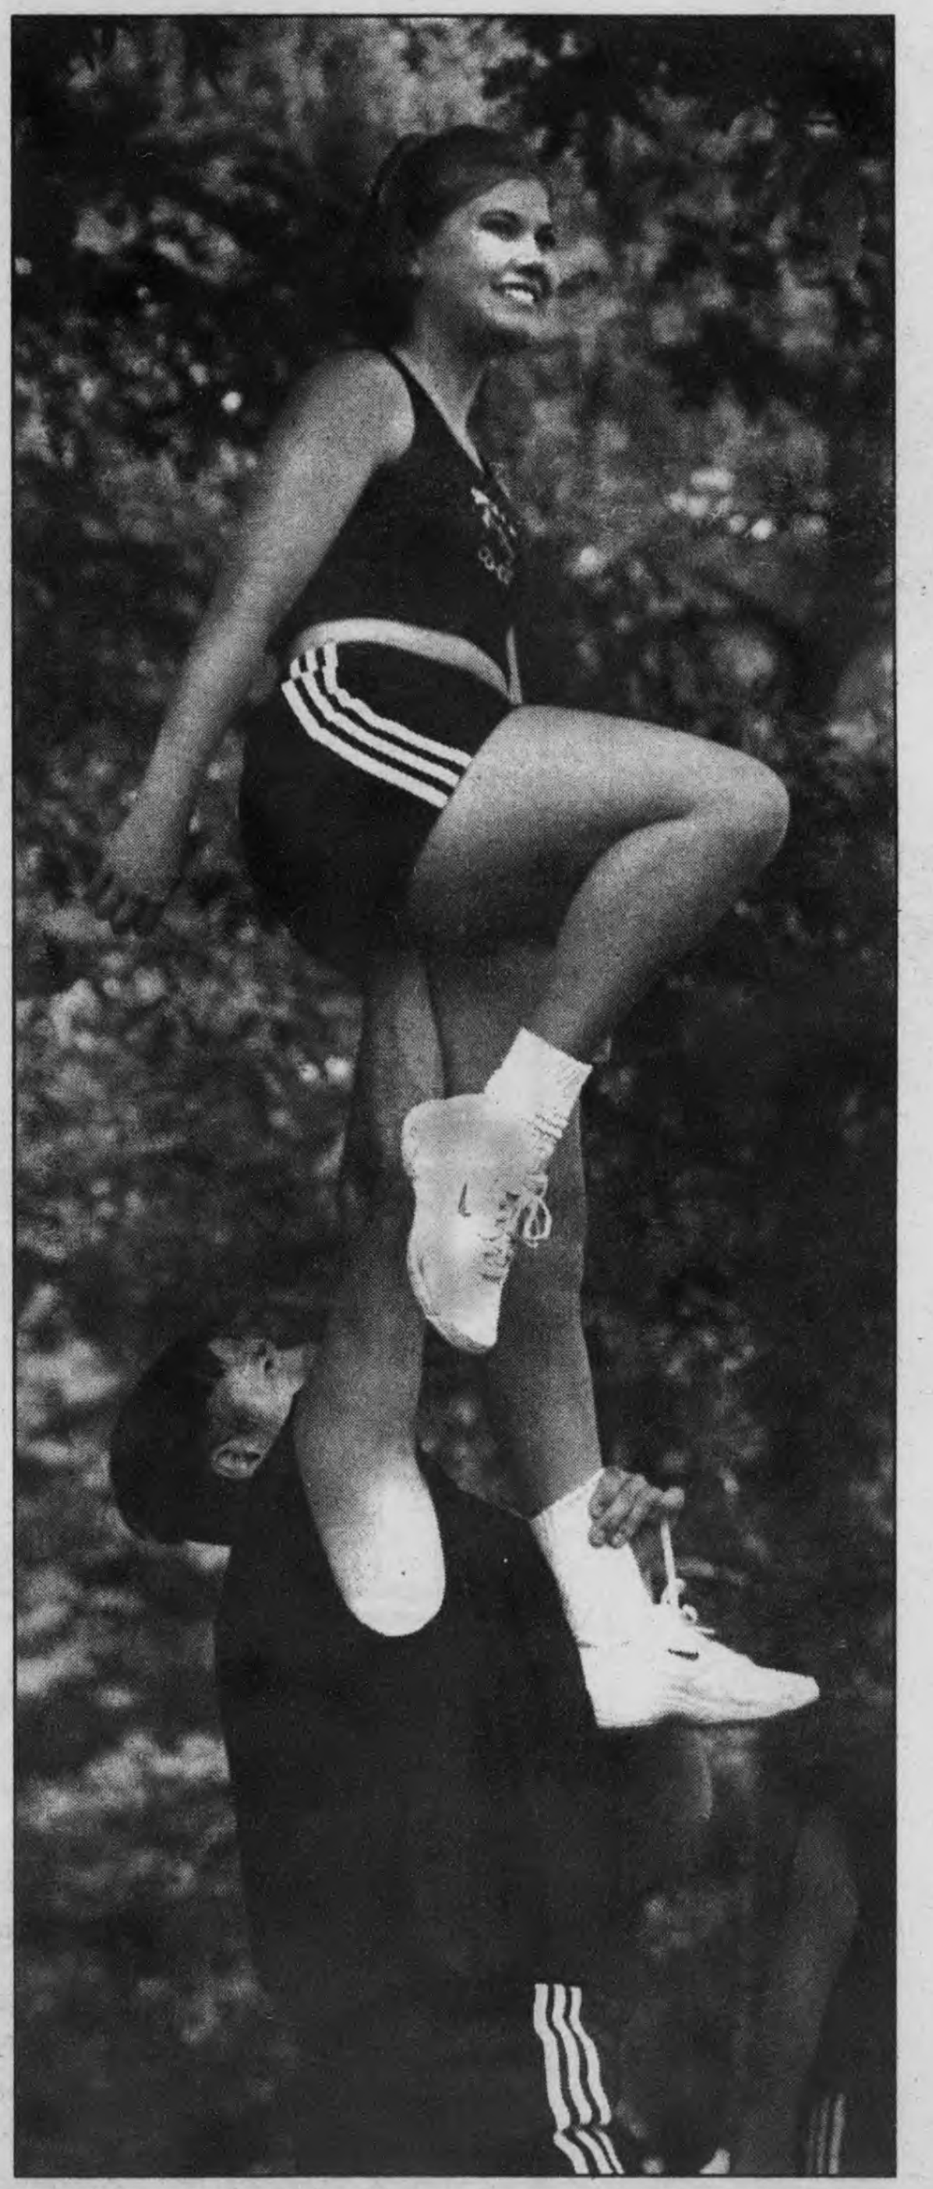
"It's kind of prestigious," she said. "Some have worked toward all-stars since their freshman year."

Three women from Spring Hill High School also will be participating in the all-star competition. Julie Bolton, Renee Frazey and Casey Rote said they have been practicing all week for the competition, especially for the dance part.

"Our CD player keeps playing the same song over and over again," said Erica Putzier, Spring Hill High School cheerleader.

Brummer said after the camp is over the cheerleading squads return home to practice what they've learned and to incorporate it with their own material.

The squads will be ready to show everyone at home what they've learned, she said, but they will be sad for camp to end because they've enjoyed their stay at K-State.



Brummer said her squad has attended cheerleading camp at K-State before. She said the K-State campus is a great location for it.

"The facilities are wonderful," she said. "Everybody's pleasant when walking on campus. They make us feel really at home."

The UCA cheerleaders aren't able to go home when camp is over. They move on to their next camp at a different campus.

Clanton said they will be at the University of Kansas in a couple of weeks.

At the beginning of July, another cheerleading camp will be at K-State. The National Cheerleading Association will have a cheerleading and dance camp for high school cheerleading squads.

Senate kills tobacco bill after fierce debate

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Election-year legislation to curb teen smoking and bring nicotine under federal regulation perished Wednesday in the Republican-controlled Senate. The American people won't like what they see, President Clinton said.

In the climax to a fierce, four-week struggle on the Senate floor, supporters of the measure failed on two successive votes to gain the 60 votes needed to keep the bill alive.

The first effort fell three votes shy; the second seven.

"If this bill goes down today, Joe Camel wins and our kids lose," said Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, one of numerous Democrats who sought unsuccessfully to end Republican blocking action on the measure.

Several Democrats vowed to force the issue back onto the Senate floor before the November elections and said Republicans were merely doing the bidding of the tobacco industry.

Majority Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi countered for Republicans who argued that the measure had become a big-government tax-and-spend bill. "We've lost sight of the original noble cause of just dealing with teen-age smoking and drug abuse," he said.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said he would try to revive some form of tobacco legislation, but only a bill that is narrowly focused on teen smoking.

"Our goal is to reduce teen smoking, not increase taxes," Gingrich said.

It was a remarkable triumph for the tobacco industry, an industry that fares poorly at the polls but that invested tens of millions of dollars on an advertising campaign to sink the bill. Many of the arguments contained in those ads advanced the same arguments that Republican critics have been making on the Senate floor.

Hours before the vote, Clinton made one final appeal, calling for action to protect the children and not the tobacco lobby.

He said he and other Democrats had met Republican critics more than halfway in agreeing to amendments over the past two weeks to cut taxes and add anti-drug provisions.

"Now, if there is a move to kill or gut this legislation, there can be no possible explanation other than the intense pressure and the awesome influence fueled by years of huge contributions of Big Tobacco," he said.

Rejection of the bill would set in motion an unpredictable chain of political and legal events.

Democrats are certain to raise the issue this fall against Republicans, while tobacco companies would be open to a fresh round of lawsuits. Left unclear is the fate of the huge settlement that several states reached with the tobacco industry a little more than a year ago to end their lawsuits.

That agreement sparked the drive to write legislation in the Senate, but election-year politics and other forces swiftly intruded.

Tobacco companies walked away from the bill when it was expanded beyond what they had agreed to with the states.

Also, a proposal to grant limited liability protection to the tobacco companies was stripped from the bill on the Senate floor as lawmakers sought a way to show voters they were willing to be tough on an industry that markets its products to teenagers.

As drafted, the measure would raise the price of a pack of cigarettes by $1.10 a pack. The money would go to help states pay their smoking-related health care costs, finance an anti-smoking advertising campaign and pay for health research.

At the insistence of Republicans, the measure also was expanded to include an election-year tax cut for couples making less than $50,000, a series of anti-drug provisions and a cap on fees for lawyers who participated in lawsuits against the tobacco industry.

Pointing to teen-age messengers who customarily sit at the foot of the Senate rostrum, Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said their peer group would be targets for tobacco marketing. The industry, he said would "consciously attempt to addict them to nicotine."

"Three thousand kids a day will take up smoking," Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, said. "One thousand of them will die prematurely."

Republicans said the truth was different, that they, too, favor cracking down on teen smoking, but that the bill had gotten out of hand.

Clinton to enforce economic sanctions for India, Pakistan

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — India will find a way around U.S. economic sanctions to buy what it needs even though it may have to pay more, Ambassador Naresh Chandra said Wednesday.

He also said American companies would feel the first effects of sanctions when India shifted some purchases from the United States to Europe or elsewhere.

"We can get what we want by other means but it might be more expensive," the ambassador said.

The Clinton administration is expected to announce within the next few days the economic sanctions it will impose on India and its neighbor Pakistan for carrying out nuclear tests last month.

Chandra told the Cato Institute, a libertarian think tank, that if the U.S. sanctions include a ban on private bank loans, "this will hurt the development process, but it will hit the state governments harder than the federal government."

The United States already has succeeded in getting the World Bank to postpone more than $1 billion in loans for electric power and other projects in India to protest the nuclear tests.

At a meeting on Friday in London, the world's leading industrial nations decided to deny non-humanitarian loans to India and Pakistan.

Annual garden tour raises money for K-State Gardens

Mary Bosco
Kansas State Collegian

The 10th-annual Riley County Master Gardener Tour on Sunday provided those who attended the opportunity to take a moment to stop and smell the roses and improve the K-State Gardens at the same time.

In addition to admiring the flowers and searching for new gardening ideas, the Master Gardeners have raised nearly $3,000 in recent years to benefit the K-State Gardens.

▶ More info
Anyone interested in volunteering for K-State Gardens can call Scott McElwain at 532-1397.

The tour is one event the Master Gardener program uses as its 40-hour community-service requirement for the class offered by the Riley County Extension office through K-State. Six gardens were selected from the tour after 15 to 20 were considered in February.

The six Manhattan gardens featured this year belonged to: Dale and Carolyn Anderson, 3000 Tamarak Dr.; Russell and Ilene Briggs, 240 Drake Dr.; Clarence and Joyce Swallow, 3800 McDowell Creek Rd.; Lee Creek Gardens, owned by David and Ann Scott, 3400 South 24th; Nancy Webster, 708 Tuttle St.; and C. Hugh and Clara Alford, 709 Tuttle St.

The Master Gardeners said they wanted to have a variety of gardens on the tour and donate the proceeds to the three-phase construction project of the K-State Gardens.

"The Master Gardener Tour is one source that is pooled together with other contributors to add up to the cost of $25,000 over five years," said Scott McElwain, assistant director of the K-State Gardens. "There is a lot of stuff just in phase one."

The construction consists of converting the old dairy barn into a visitors' center, adding a fountain, maintenance and irrigation, plus expanding to 12 total acres on campus. McElwain said brick-paved walkways have been purchased for sidewalk areas around the visitors' center and to define perennial and annual flower beds.

The conservatory also will need some improvements because the hailstorm broke its windows.

"A lot of the plant materials took a beating in the hail, and it will take a while to get them back to normal," McElwain said.

After the project is complete, students will be able to utilize the gardens in a variety of ways.

"It will be a big benefit to the students and the public," McElwain said. "Not just the horticultural students, but the school of agricultural, forestry, construction science and vet-med also."

The gardens will provide learning experiences in every phase. McElwain said that during the construction a lot of students will get hands-on experience constructing the gardens. When construction is complete, it will be used for plant identification and a study area. A poisonous-plant garden will be grown for College of Veterinary Medicine students and there has

TEEN TROUBLES

Progress mixed for teen girls

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A new report said adolescent girls are doing better in school and having fewer babies, but they're also smoking more and playing sports less often than before.

And they're often depressed.

The report issued Tuesday by the National Council for Research on Women examined some 200 studies done on adolescent girls over the past decade. It did not include any original research.

—Girls now do nearly as well as boys in math in elementary school, while continuing to do as well in reading and language, though boys tend to outperform girls in math and science by high school.

—The teen birth rate has dropped steadily since 1992, thanks in part to an increase in use of birth control.

—The percentage of eighth-grade girls who smoke increased from 13 percent in 1991 to 21 percent in 1996.

—Girls are twice as likely as boys to be depressed during adolescence and more likely to consider and attempt suicide. Boys, however, are more likely to die from suicide.

—The proportion of high school sophomore girls playing on sports teams dropped from 46 percent in 1980 to 41 percent in 1990.

Little League fastballs can kill

A baseball thrown at a modest, Little League speed of 30 mph can cause sudden death from heart failure if it strikes the chest at precisely the wrong moment in the heartbeat cycle, a study found.

The study, conducted by throwing balls at anesthetized young pigs, was intended to explain those rare instances in which youngsters with no heart problems dropped dead on the playing field.

The phenomenon is known as commotio cordis, or concussion of the heart. But until now, doctors only could speculate on exactly why a relatively mild blow to the chest can kill.

The answer, based on the study: the blow scrambles the heart's electrical signals at a particularly vulnerable moment.

"Not every blow to the chest is going to result in a death like this," said one of the researchers, Dr. Barry Maron of the Minnesota Heart Institute Foundation. "Timing, force and location have to conspire to produce this rare but tragic thing."

The study was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Commotio cordis usually results from being struck by a baseball, but reported cases have also involved softball, karate, football, hockey, even slam dancing. Children are most vulnerable, perhaps because their chest walls are thinner.

Maron theorized that sudden death can occur when the chest wall is struck during a vulnerable interval — just over 1/100th of a second — during which the heart repolarizes electrically in preparation for the next contraction, or heartbeat.

The study confirmed his theory: a moderate blow during repolarization can cause ventricular defibrillation, in which heart muscle fibers contract randomly instead of beating together and the heart cannot pump blood.

In the first part of the study, pigs 4 to 8 weeks old and weighing 18 to 26 pounds were struck in the chest with a wooden ball at various points during the heartbeat cycle. The ball was thrown at 30 mph, the average speed of the balls that caused the death of the children described in Maron's previous study. All the pigs were under general anesthesia.

By comparison, a major league fastball is well over 90 mph.

Vaccine for cervical cancer now being tested in humans

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Scientists who hope one day to immunize girls against cervical cancer have begun the first human testing of a possible vaccine.

It's far too soon to know if Merck & Co.'s experimental vaccine, described at a biotechnology meeting here this week, will work. The company is in the first stage of testing, to make sure the vaccine is safe enough to study in large numbers of women.

But it's a long-awaited step.

"We have an exciting opportunity," Dr. Katherin Jansen, Merck's lead scientist, said as she reported that the vaccine seemed highly effective in animals.

At issue is human papilloma virus, or HPV, the nation's most common sexually-transmitted disease.

Up to 40 million Americans are infected with one of 80 strains of HPV, and untold millions worldwide also are infected. The virus is harmless to the vast majority — but a tiny percentage of women, perhaps 1 percent, get one of a few dangerous strains that cause cervical cancer.

The dilemma: nobody knows which women will get sick.

But every year, half a million women worldwide get cervical cancer. That includes almost 16,000 Americans, 5,000 of whom die, said the American Cancer Society.

The company's target is a strain called HPV-16, believed responsible for half of all cervical cancer cases.

The field is heating up. MedImmune Inc., a small Maryland biotechnology company, is working on a similar vaccine against HPV-16. In January, the company signed a deal worth $85 million giving SmithKline Beecham rights to market the vaccine if the work pans out.

Experts said this early research isn't aimed at complete protection. HPV-16 plus three other strains are responsible for 85 percent of all cervical cancer, so a four-pronged vaccine would be ideal.

Still, people have been looking for an HPV vaccine for a long time, said Gregory Milman of the National Institutes of Health. "It's been very hard to (manufacture) HPV proteins," an important vaccine ingredient. That Merck found a possible solution is intriguing, he said.

Merck genetically engineered "virus-like particles," or VLPs, to use in making the experimental vaccine. VLPs can induce the immune system to produce potent antibodies, immune cells that target and kill the virus, Jansen said. These antibodies proved protective in animal studies, persuading Merck to begin Phase I testing of the vaccine's safety in women, she said.

Phase II tests to see if the vaccine is protective might begin by the end of this year, she said.

Team lends helping hand to horses

Students on the Equine Emergency Team help clinicians and senior students at K-State's Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital while gaining valuable hands-on experience that will help them throughout their school year.

The Equine Emergency Team, created by K-State's chapter of the American Association of Equine Practitioners, gives volunteer members the opportunity to be on-call after hours to assist horses in need of medical care and to get experience with emergency situations.

> "IT GIVES YOU GOOD HANDS-ON EXPERIENCE THAT CORRESPONDS WITH WHAT YOU LEARN IN CLASSES."
> ROBERT DUDLEY
> sophomore in veterinary medicine

During the school year, three volunteers are selected to be on-call every night. One freshman, one sophomore and one junior are assigned to work together each night to bring different levels of experience to each medical situation.

Some of the regular duties of the volunteers are refilling IV drips; preparing instruments, suture materials and horses for surgery; administering drugs; and taking fluid samples to and from the laboratory.

"It gives you good hands-on experience that corresponds with what you learn in classes," Robert Dudley, sophomore in veterinary medicine, said.

"You get to ask a lot of questions. It's a really good learning experience," he said.

Volunteers get the opportunity to meet the staff and the clinicians, become familiar with the building and observe the procedures.

The most common situations volunteers face are horses with colic and sick foals that require 24-hour supervision, Tresha Robinson, senior in veterinary medicine, said.

"We really rely on them (volunteers) for help," she said.

Robinson, who volunteered last year, said as a volunteer you gain familiarity with procedures and surgeries as well as the staff you'll be working with as a senior.

The Emergency Team is strictly voluntary, but Robinson recommends getting involved because of the preparation it gives veterinary students.

"You'll be a step ahead because you've been exposed to so many situations and emergencies," she said.

A unique vantage of Manhattan linear park

Scott Aldis-Wilson
Kansas State Collegian

There's a free tour of Manhattan year-round every day from 30 minutes before sunrise until sunset. Just bring your own tour guide and don't expect to drive.

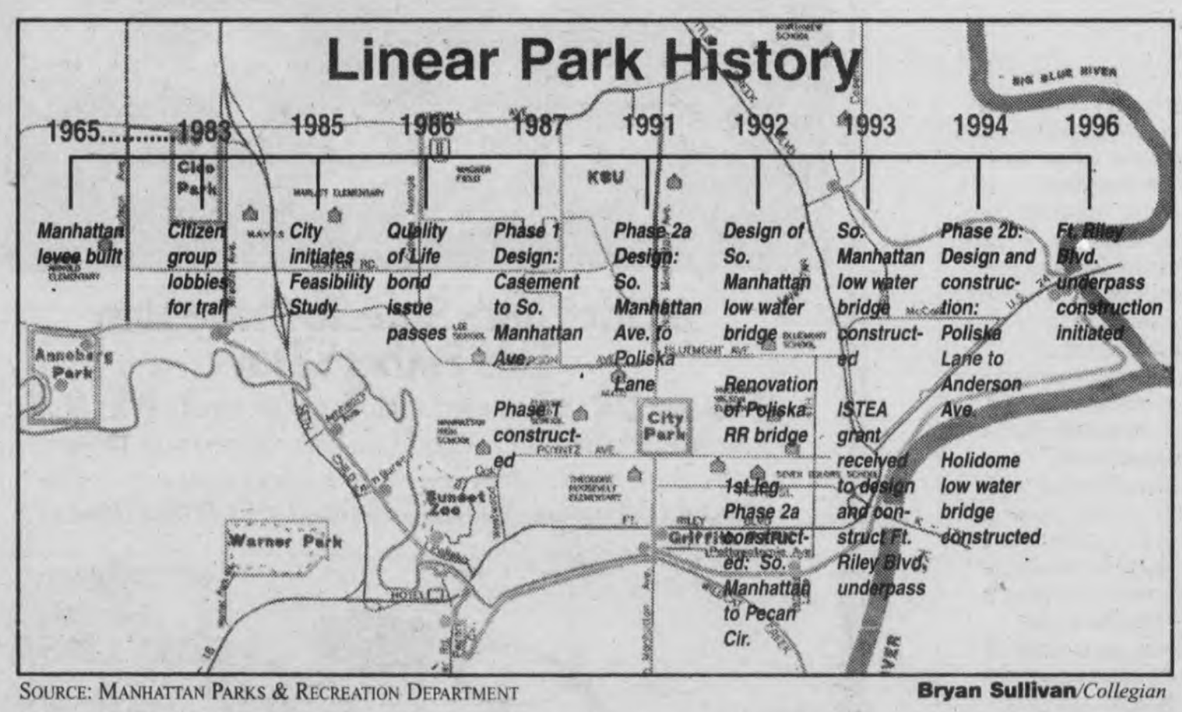
The Manhattan Linear Park, created and maintained by the Department of Parks and Recreation, is a nine-mile trail running from Casement Road in the northeast end of town to its end in Anneberg Park on the west side. Motor vehicles are prohibited except on trail-access points, but joggers, walkers, bicycles, inline skates, strollers and leashed pets are welcome.

The park, which has been an ongoing project of the department since 1986, currently has 11 trail-access points for pedestrians, seven of them with nearby parking, park planner Richard Allen said. The points at Anneberg Park and at the intersections of Anderson Avenue and Wreath Avenue and of Casement Road and U.S. Highway 24 are wheelchair-accessible, Allen said.

The trail allows users to see Manhattan history: from the levees and the Kansas and Big Blue rivers, as well as Wildcat Creek, throughout the first five miles of the Casement end of the trail, to the former railroad bridges converted to trails at the Poliska Lane access point.

Sections also vary in their level of seclusion from the rest of town. Portions of the trail wind past Sunset Zoological Park, the Holiday Inn Holidome and U.S. Highway 24, where well-traversed streets are only a few feet away. Others, like the nearly 1.5-mile stretch near the Pecan Circle point can leave a walker or biker with no scenery but a wheat field on one side and mulberry trees on the other.

People come out the trail for different reasons. Near the Poliska Lane point, Travis and Denise Hoem rode with their children, Callie, 4; and Austin, 3. The Hoems said they ride about a mile on the trail every day around 6 p.m. because their children can ride with them. A mile down the way, Bob Kim and his son Tony, who just finished his freshman year at Manhattan High School, walked their dogs Tilly and Lucky.



Allen said the Linear Park trail and its counterparts in other states came from a popular concept from the '80s of parks built as continuous trails. The design, he said, appeals to several demographic groups, from baby boomers trying to stay fit without high-impact sports, to young families bringing children, to college students looking to get away for while.

"People like to be on the move with only a small amount of time," Allen said.

Allen said that although the city commission has adopted a new master plan for an 80-acre community park east of Casement Road on Knox Lane, the funding has yet to be located. In its entirety, the plan would take the trail through the new park and along a north then west path before going south to connect with Anneberg Park, thus completing the trail's loop around Manhattan. By this version of the plan, Allen said, up to 20 miles could be added to the trail.

Complete loop or not, the trail still gives Manhattan residents something different from asphalt. Manhattan resident Robert Clay said he uses the portion between South Manhattan Avenue and Anderson Avenue every few days.

"It's not to get away," Clay said. "It's to get me in touch with it." Clay said he comes out on the trail to observe, listen to birds sing and to sample the mulberries. His advice to first-time park visitors is to take it slow and observe it for what it is.

Military analyst quits over nerve gas report

NEW YORK — CNN's top military analyst has resigned to protest its report that U.S. forces used nerve gas in a mission to hunt down American defectors in Laos during the Vietnam War.

Retired Maj. Gen. Perry Smith, who has been an on-air military expert for CNN since the Persian Gulf War, "leaves with our great respect," CNN spokesman Steve Haworth said Wednesday. "I think it's an honest difference of opinion."

Smith resigned Sunday after failing to persuade the network to retract its report, first aired June 7.

The "CNN NewsStand-Time" report accused the military of using sarin gas during Operation Tailwind in Laos, in which two U.S. defectors supposedly were killed, and in other missions. The joint report by CNN and Time magazine quoted several Special Forces soldiers who said they were involved in the operation. According to the report, the mission was approved by the Nixon White House and the CIA.

"CNN has damaged the United States of America quite seriously," Smith told The Washington Post. The 30-year Air Force officer, an author and teacher of ethics and management, flew combat missions over Laos in 1968 and 1969 and said he never heard of nerve gas being used.

Smith said he had to quit because many in the military assume that because he worked at CNN, he approved of the report.

"I can't work for an organization that would do something like this and not fess up to it," he told the newspaper.

Another Vietnam-era officer, retired Adm. Thomas Moorer, was quoted in the CNN report as confirming the use of sarin gas, but said last week he simply had heard of unconfirmed stories about it and had no independent knowledge.

CNN followed up its story on Sunday, reporting on the controversy it had sparked and saying that some military officials told CNN the gas was tear gas, not sarin. But the network stands by the story.

"CNN's story is extremely well-sourced, with some 200 people interviewed over eight months up and down the chain of command," Haworth said.

been discussion about a large sculpture garden for art students to display in the gardens.

"We will take advantage of when we can accommodate a club or particular major," McElwain said.

Thomas Warner, head of the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation Resources, said students and the public are welcome to visit the gardens, but they only would be able to see the day-lily garden and the rose garden. But, he said the day-lily garden was damaged during the storm.

Warner said the best time to come to the gardens will be next fall because the fountain and additional gardens will be done.

"There will be a lot to see early fall," he said.

McElwain said anyone wanting to learn about gardening can come to the gardens.

"We welcome volunteers. It isn't only a learning experience, but a great opportunity to enjoy the gardens," McElwain said. "Plus it helps us out with maintenance. Twelve acres of garden space will require quite a bit of maintenance down the road."

Strike might cause reassessment

Associated Press

DETROIT — A top General Motors Corp. executive warned Wednesday that the United Auto Workers' debilitating strikes at two Michigan parts plants may cause it to reassess some planned investments in the United States.

Donald C. Hackworth, vice president of GM's North American Car Group, said the strikes in Flint were having "a far-reaching effect on our ability to compete" and becoming a drain on GM's cash reserves.

"We have product programs and investment decisions that we have to make in this country, and when things are going on in this country that begin to hurt us financially, we'll have to reassess it," Hackworth said.

As talks continued, Hackworth said the company was willing to begin around-the-clock negotiations with the UAW to end the strikes, which by Wednesday had halted about 80 percent of GM's North American production.

Retailers struggle to lure college students to retail careers, raise recruiting measures

Associated Press

NEW YORK — There's a lot more to retailing than folding sweaters at The Gap or working the register at a Kmart, but that's the image that is turning many college graduates away from careers in the industry.

Faced with a scant pool of job applicants and fierce competition from hot fields such as finance, consulting and technology, merchants have an uphill battle on college campuses.

So salaries are going up for entry-level jobs for college grads — some by as much as 25 percent from the early 1990s — and chief executives are making recruiting calls to steer young people toward retailing.

Many retailing giants that normally compete for employees, including Sears, Wal-Mart and J.C. Penney, even are joining forces at a conference outside Chicago on Friday to develop ways to raise student interest.

"Students think retailing is the minimum-wage sales job, working nights and weekends," said Ellen Goldsberry, director of the Southwest Retail Center for education and research at the University of Arizona. "They've formed this narrow view, and they don't consider it a career with opportunities."

Years ago, retailing was a sought-after occupation for young people. Competition was fierce to get into stores' executive-training programs, which were the breeding ground for the next generation of top managers.

But mass layoffs and many retail bankruptcies turned graduates away in the early 1990s. Many worry about job security in the retail industry. Also, the booming job market is giving students their pick of careers, many of them better-paying.

"I'm interested in retailing, but I'm not sure how far it will take me, so I may choose to go into marketing instead, where I might have more room to grow," said Jarenda Butler, who is entering her senior year at Florida A&M in Tallahassee.

To educate students like Butler about the opportunities in retailing, many merchants are stepping up their recruiting. They are visiting schools more often and sending more and higher-level people.

Instead of just interviewing, retailers are spending more time telling students about the opportunities outside of merchandising and store management, such as finance, computer systems, real estate and community affairs.

Retailers also are becoming more aggressive on the Internet, using their own World Wide Web pages as well as sites run by university career centers.

"There are so many different facets in retailing that students aren't aware of," said Larry Naishtut, vice president of merchant development at Macy's East. "We need to tell them that a career in retailing isn't a dead end. Many CEOs came right from these executive-training programs."

Already, many stores have raised entry-level salaries in recent years, making their base pay competitive with other industries. The average now runs as high as about $40,000, up from the low $30,000 range a few years ago.

Many retailers also are offering more internships to students still in school.

That's what persuaded Kerry Rhodes to consider a job in retailing. After finishing his junior year as a marketing major at Kent State University in Ohio, he accepted a 10-week internship at a J.C. Penney store.

Today, at 23, he runs the children's department at Penney's Mall store near Youngstown.

"I didn't want to go into retailing, but I couldn't find another job," Rhodes said. "I was greedy, money-hungry and didn't think that retailing was a career that could provide me with what I wanted.

"Now, I have more responsibility at work than most of my friends, and I don't know too many other people my age who have enough money for a new car and a condo," he said. "I guess I just needed to learn a little more about the business."

Police officer who mailed racist mail might get pension

NEW YORK — A police officer who admitted mailing hundreds of racist and anti-Semitic leaflets to charity groups might be allowed to retire with his pension, The New York Times reported Wednesday.

Officer Thomas Pappas, 47, admitted sending the letters for a decade to several groups, including the Mineola Auxiliary Police Department, a volunteer organization on Long Island.

For years, the group received letters about a Jewish conspiracy and grotesque caricatures of blacks and Jews every time it mailed out requests for donations.

"Finally, we said that we had to find out who this guy was," said Stuart Goldstein, the group's assistant chief.

Authorities traced the letters to Pappas, and in March, he admitted sending them. Pappas was assigned to desk duty. His case is to be reviewed by an administrative police-department judge in two weeks.

Internal police documents showed that department lawyers have offered Pappas, a 16-year veteran, an agreement that would allow him to retire with his pension, the Times said.

Deputy Inspector Michael Collins, a police spokesman, refused to comment on the specifics of the case and said Pappas' retirement still was being discussed.

Pappas has an unpublished phone number and could not be reached for comment.

11 killed in bar shooting in Brazil

SAO PAULO, Brazil — Three heavily armed men opened fire in a bar early Wednesday, killing 11 people and seriously wounding four, police said.

The shootings occurred in the Francisco Morato neighborhood on the outskirts of Sao Paulo while people were celebrating Brazil's 3-0 victory over Morocco in the World Cup, Police Chief Eduardo Salles Pitta said.

Three women were among the dead, Pitta said.

Police said they believe the killings were drug-related. They said most of the dead had been shot in the head.

WARRIOR SPIRIT

Disney's 'Mulan' has plenty for children, grown-ups to enjoy review by The Associated Press • photos courtesy of Disney Enterprises, Inc.

In Disney's delightful animated adventure "Mulan," a young Chinese woman sets out to repel invading Huns and ends up capturing viewers' hearts.

Along the way, the audience is treated to a fast-paced story laced with catchy tunes and occasionally startling animation.

And if you're wondering if anybody could match Robin Williams' performance as the voice of the genie in "Aladdin," the answer is yes: Eddie Murphy makes his mark as a fast-talking, wisecracking, pint-sized dragon who plays sidekick to the title character.

▶ More info?
To read more about Disney's new movie, 'Mulan,' point your web browser to www.disney.com/DisneyPictures/Mulan/index.html.

Living in ancient times, Mulan is a disaster at the task her society has imposed on her: mastering the social graces she needs to attract a husband. She seems part klutz and part victim of bad luck.

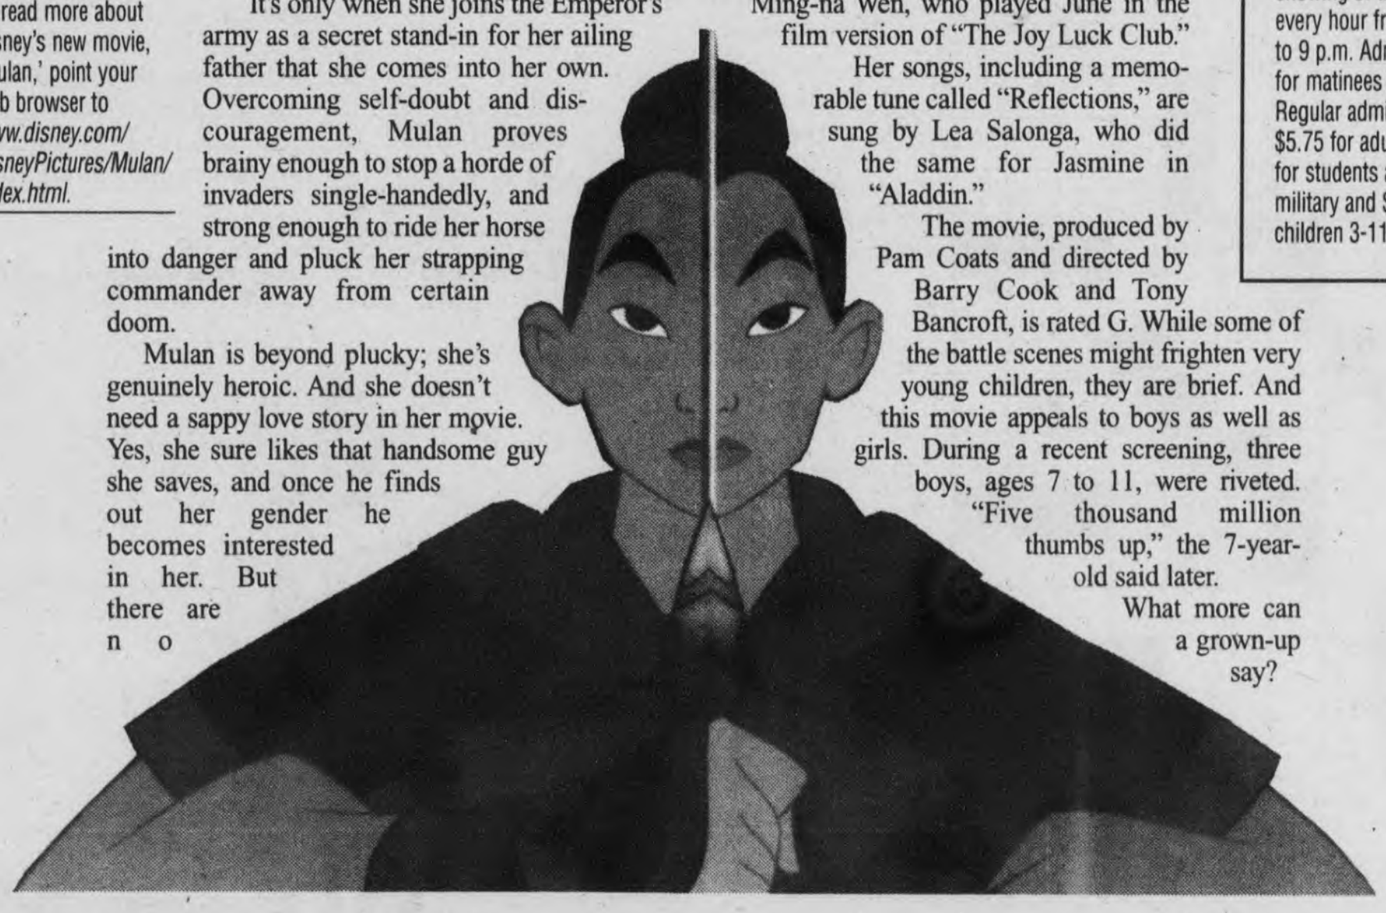
It's only when she joins the Emperor's army as a secret stand-in for her ailing father that she comes into her own. Overcoming self-doubt and discouragement, Mulan proves brainy enough to stop a horde of invaders single-handedly, and strong enough to ride her horse into danger and pluck her strapping commander away from certain doom.

Mulan is beyond plucky; she's genuinely heroic. And she doesn't need a sappy love story in her movie. Yes, she sure likes that handsome guy she saves, and once he finds out her gender he becomes interested in her. But there are no lingering love scenes here. Mulan and Captain Shang finally get together at the end of the movie, and viewers can take it from there in their imaginations.

On the other hand, viewers don't have to imagine 2,000 Huns charging on horseback because Disney's computers provide that scene in a breathtaking feat of animation.

The charge is seen from above, and you see not only the horses and riders but also their shadows on the snow. The effect is so realistic you wonder if Disney has deftly slipped in some footage from a Cecil B. DeMille epic.

Another nice animation touch: The way flags flap is hypnotic.



While Murphy delivers a knockout performance as the voice of Mushu the dragon, other voices bring formidable talent, too. Mulan's speaking voice comes from Ming-na Wen, who played June in the film version of "The Joy Luck Club."

Her songs, including a memorable tune called "Reflections," are sung by Lea Salonga, who did the same for Jasmine in "Aladdin."

The movie, produced by Pam Coats and directed by Barry Cook and Tony Bancroft, is rated G. While some of the battle scenes might frighten very young children, they are brief. And this movie appeals to boys as well as girls. During a recent screening, three boys, ages 7 to 11, were riveted.

"Five thousand million thumbs up," the 7-year-old said later.

What more can a grown-up say?

New certificates designed to foil falsifiers

Scott Aldis-Wilson
Kansas State Collegian

If you plan to get a copy of your birth certificate soon, be ready for a little color.

The Kansas Office of Vital Statistics within the Department of Health and Environment has adopted a new format for vital documents, including live birth, stillbirth, marriage, divorce and death certificates within the state.

Unlike their predecessors on plain white paper, the new certificates will feature multiple colors, backgrounds and textures, said Don Brown, public information officer for the department.

> "IT'S REALLY UNIQUE, AND IF YOU SEE SOMETHING ELSE, IT'S OBVIOUS THEY'RE NOT THE SAME THING"
> DON BROWN
> public information officer for the Department of Health and Environment

The new design is intended to make unauthorized duplications, alterations or other changes to the documents much more difficult, Brown said.

"It's really unique, and if you see something else, it's obvious they're not the same thing," Brown said.

The new documents include colors embedded into the paper pattern, not unlike the background of some auto titles and cashier checks, Brown said. He also said the new certificates are treated so the word "void" will show up if they are copied or scanned.

The new certificates have been printing since June 1, Brown said, with the first certified birth-certificate copy made for Cabinet Secretary of the Department of Health and Environment Gary Mitchell. Brown said the past year had been spent studying options with federal agencies as well as vendors and contractors for the technology.

One feature that didn't change is the price of copies. They will still cost $10 for the first certified copy and $5 for each additional copy, Brown said.

One of the reasons the state picked now to change formats was because technology is more affordable, and new copies can be distributed for the original price, Brown said.

"That is a significant amount for some people, and we're making sure that we will not be putting that out of touch of people," Brown said.

Brown said all remaining states and territories likely will put similar security measures into place in the next two years.

"The key for the security in most cases is around the birth certificate," Brown said.

He said they commonly are called breeder documents, because they are commonly a starting point for obtaining social security numbers, getting a job, paying taxes, entering school and other situations that rely upon proof of identity.

Kansas wanted to get on the bandwagon, he said, before those trying to use false identities move into states without updated document security.

This change only affects the copies, Brown said, because people are never given the originals, which stay with the office permanently. The original form parents sign in the hospital for a baby's certificate has not changed.

The white paper copies still are accepted in Kansas, Brown said.

"We've been pointing out that it's still valid if it's embossed," Brown said.

Melvin Snoke, supervisor for the Manhattan Drivers License Office, said his office has only seen about 10 of the new certificates since they became the new standard.

The documents are easier to read and identify, he said, but many people keep older certificates stored away until they need them.

"I don't think anybody's going to order a new birth certificate just to have one," Snoke said.

Snoke also said he expects the office to see quite a few more of the new certificates in the next six months as part of the normal turnover.

America Online rejects takeover offer from AT&T

NEW YORK — America Online Inc. rejected a takeover offer from AT&T Corp. to combine the world's largest online service with the biggest phone company, a published report said Wednesday.

The Financial Times, citing sources close to both companies, said AT&T chairman Michael Armstrong approached AOL several weeks ago with a tentative offer. But AOL officials told AT&T several days ago they did not want to sell the company, the report said.

AOL's stock-market value is more than $19 billion. AT&T was willing to pay comfortably above that, the British business daily said.

Spokeswomen from both companies declined to comment on the report.

AT&T aggressively has been trying to expand beyond its long-distance franchise since Armstrong took over in October. The company says it hopes to one day offer customers a package of long distance, local, wireless, paging and Internet services. The company agreed in January to acquire Teleport Communications for $11.3 billion in an attempt to gain quick entry into the local phone business.

AT&T has struggled to gain a significant foothold in the Internet service business. Its online service, AT&T WorldNet, has accumulated about 1.1 million customers since its 1995 launch, compared with AOL's worldwide membership of 12 million. AOL also operates CompuServe, a service with 2 million members.

Male model loses discrimination case

LONDON — A British court rejected a sexual-discrimination lawsuit Wednesday by a male model who sued a college for giving women preference as nude models for its art classes.

George Bond, 54, cited as evidence the 68 hours — out of a possible 1,260 — that he had been employed by Northampton College, northwest of London.

The college denied all claims of sexism and said Bond was difficult to work with and unreliable. One instructor said Bond was always moaning, complaining about the cold and going to the toilet.

College officials also said they were not comfortable employing Bond because he had appeared in a pornographic film and in a documentary about the making of a sex film.

Bond said he is deciding where to go from here. He said he may just get a normal job to pay the bills.

LAW CHANGES

Congress approves tougher penalties for telemarketers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Legislation to impose harsher criminal penalties on telephone marketers who swindle people has received final congressional approval and is headed to President Clinton for his signature.

The bill, passed Tuesday by the House 411-1, directs the U.S. Sentencing Commission to increase substantially sentencing guidelines for general telemarketing schemes and to make those guidelines even tougher for those who defraud people who are 55 years or older. The one vote against the measure was cast by Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas.

The measure originally passed the House last July. The Senate approved an amended version last November, and the House accepted the Senate version Tuesday.

The bill requires that people convicted of a fraudulent telemarketing scheme forfeit any money they get through their operations and expands current law by allowing organizers of fraudulent acts to be punished under a conspiracy charge.

The Sentencing Commission is an independent agency that establishes sentencing guidelines used by federal judges.

Research shows that sleep drivers cause 3 percent of highway crashes

CHICAGO — Tired at the wheel? Researchers say forget the radio or rolling down the window to wake up.

"The only way to reverse the physiological need for sleep is to sleep," according to an article published Wednesday in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The Council on Scientific Affairs reviewed two decades of research, including National Highway Traffic Safety Administration studies indicating that as many as 3 percent of highway crashes are caused by driver sleepiness.

Tired drivers are the primary cause of 100,000 police-reported crashes annually and 4 percent of fatal crashes, the federal agency said.

Motorists risk injury and death not only from falling asleep while driving but also from loss of attention or slowing of reactions during critical driving tasks or maneuvers, according to the article.

Youthful drivers with poor sleep habits and workers with unusual hours are most at risk to fall asleep at the wheel, the article said.

A roadside survey of 593 long-distance truck drivers indicated that at least 25 percent had fallen asleep behind the wheel at least once in the preceding year.

SOLDIER DIES

Fort Riley soldier dies during training, 3 others injured

One Fort Riley soldier was killed and three were injured during a training exercise Friday at the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif.

The soldier who died was Pfc. Christopher M. Cerda, 19. The three soldiers who were injured are Sgt. James A. Blackwell, Pfc. Jacob A. Mayo and Spc. John S. Illyes. Their injuries are not life-threatening.

Services for Cerda took place at the National Training Center on Monday night for the unit. A memorial service is scheduled for this morning at Fort Riley.

All four of the soldiers are assigned to the 70th Engineer Battalion and were at the National Training Center as part of the 3rd Brigade's training rotation.

The soldiers are there as part of their training, during which live ammunition is used for only part of the time. The accident happened during the live-fire part of their training, Skidmore said.

The accident occurred as the four soldiers were operating an M113A2 armored personnel carrier. The vehicle was struck at close range by a single 25mm round that was discharged from a Bradley Fighting Vehicle.

It is still unknown why the round discharged, and the accident is under investigation by the U.S. Army Safety Center and Fort Irwin safety officials.

Health center might buy K-State land

Scott Aldis-Wilson
Kansas State Collegian

K-State could be in for a change next spring. On the other hand, it might not.

Officials from both K-State and Mercy Health Center of Manhattan Inc. have said informal talks have been progressing about the possibility of selling 22 acres of K-State land to the hospital for expansion of health services, but no official proposals have been made.

The 22 acres at issue lie nearly half a mile south of the Mercy Health Center on College Avenue. The current site includes both the Kansas Artificial Breeding Service Unit on the northwest corner of College Avenue and Claflin Road and the Kansas Forest Service to the west.

KABSU is operated under the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, while the forest service is under the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation Resources.

Charles Michaels, director of KABSU, said he has been aware of the talks and some preparations have been made.

KABSU and the forest service were appraised about a month ago, he said. Michaels also said he submitted a new layout proposal to the dean of agriculture, Marc Johnson, on June 12 for the possibility of being moved.

KABSU specializes in the extraction, storage and transportation of bull semen to private clients in the ranching or breeding business.

Michaels said the institution has been at its current location since 1950 and is financially self-supported by client fees.

Michaels said the complex covers roughly 15 acres, with four barns, one lab/storage/shipping area, two hay storage buildings, an office building and a collection area with attached lab.

For now, Michaels said, he has not been notified of official decisions about a move. Although there are rumors of possible relocation sites for KABSU, there is no immediate pressure to find a new site until it is certain the old site will be sold, he said.

> "WE'RE WATCHING IT AND PREPARING FOR THE EVENTUALITY, BUT WE'RE NOT PACKING OUR BAGS YET."
> LANNIE ZWEIMILLER
> director of Lafene Health Center

"The bottom line is there's very little need to discuss it," Michaels said.

Another possibility suggested early on was that if the area was sold to Mercy Health Center of Manhattan Inc., the center would vacate its Sunset Avenue building currently leased from the county and allow Lafene Health Center to move in.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said the possibility of the move could take three to four years to become a reality.

Zweimiller said the majority of student responses to the idea have been positive, possibly due to added parking and expanded services.

However, Zweimiller said the idea is currently in the "possibly, maybe potentially" stage.

"We're watching it and preparing for the eventuality, but we're not packing our bags yet," Zweimiller said.

Tom Rawson, K-State vice president of administration and finance, said discussions have been ongoing since March or April.

One problem, he said, is so many levels must be navigated to authorize sales of the state-owned area. First, the Riley County Commission must be contacted, followed by approval by the Kansas Board of Regents and then specific authorization by the Kansas Legislature.

Rawson said they would have to wait to contact the regents in fall 1998 and approach the Legislature by the 1999 session. On this timetable, a sale would be reached by March or April of next year. This all begins with a proposal, Rawson said.

"These transitions take a lot of time and discussion," Rawson said. "I think at this point, Mercy Hospital has to decide what to do."

Mercy Health Center of Manhattan Inc. CEO Mike Nunamaker declined to comment on the plans for the moment. He did say Mercy's discussions with K-State had no connection whatsoever to Mercy Health Center's plans for a Manhattan surgical center.

Inmate on trial for slaying dies after jail fight

Associated Press

WICHITA— A mentally retarded man on trial for fatally stabbing a county deputy died after a fight with jailers, officials said.

Sam Penn, 24, was causing a disturbance with his dinner tray at about 6:15 p.m. Sunday in his cell at the Sedgwick County Jail, Sheriff's Cpt. Gary Steed said.

"He threw his tray down and lunged at one of the deputies and started choking him," Steed said.

A second deputy called for help and then began struggling with Penn in an attempt to restrain him, Steed said.

As the other deputies arrived and handcuffed Penn, he went into "some type of seizures," Steed said. Penn was taken to Via Christi-St. Francis Medical Center, where he was pronounced dead at 7:41 p.m.

Steed said the Sedgwick County Sheriff's office was investigating, and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation was notified. An autopsy was planned to determine the cause of death.

It was not the first time Penn had assaulted detention officers while at the jail, Steed said. In October, a Sedgwick County judge ruled that Penn — who psychologists said is either mildly or borderline mentally retarded — was competent to stand trial because he was able to understand the charges against him and assist with his defense.

Defense attorneys argued Penn was incompetent to stand trial, saying he had the mental ability of a fourth-grader. A judge ruled in October that Penn was able to understand the charges against him, which were first-degree murder, attempted murder and aggravated assault.

Prosecutors, who placed Penn's mental ability at that of a sixth-grader, agreed to seek 40 years in prison without parole. The trial started June 15.

Under state law, prosecutors could seek the death penalty for someone convicted of killing a law enforcement officer. But state law also says that a mentally retarded person cannot be executed.

Penn was jailed after he allegedly stabbed Sgt. Ken Snider, 48, on April 17 as Snider and three other deputies were investigating reports of a domestic dispute at Penn's Wichita home.

According to court records, Snider and the other deputies saw Penn with a knife behind his back when they arrived at the home.

He eventually gave the knife to his mother, but when Snider tried to arrest him, he allegedly bolted for the kitchen, picked up another knife and stabbed Snider.

During testimony Wednesday, Deputy Michael Moreland said Penn came at him with the knife as well. He said he was able to grab Penn's hand, wrestle him down and handcuff him.

Prosecutor Mike Jennings said Penn said on several occasions that he stabbed Snider because he didn't want to go to prison. He said Penn also told a detective that he wanted to die and had hoped one of the deputies would shoot him.

Court records showed Penn had been charged with attacking or threatening law enforcement officers on at least four other occasions.

Greeno, told the jury in his opening statement that Penn had mental problems, had been in and out mental hospitals since the age of nine, and suffered from paranoia, mental retardation and schizophrenia.

Starr will get Monica Lewinsky's book purchase list

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — While trying to negotiate an immunity deal for their client, Monica Lewinsky's attorneys are helping Whitewater prosecutors out of a sticky fight by providing them records of her book purchases, legal sources familiar with the deal said Monday.

Under the arrangement, Kramerbooks & afterwords, a Washington, D.C., bookstore, will give up its fight challenging independent prosecutor Kenneth Starr's demand to learn what books the former White House intern purchased. The bookstore will give the information to Lewinsky's lawyers, who will turn it over to Starr, according to legal sources who would not be quoted by name.

The deal would allow the bookstore, which has fought Starr's subpoena for the records vigorously on First Amendment grounds, to save face by saying it did not give the records to prosecutors.

More importantly, one legal source said, the arrangement would allow the Lewinsky defense team to show good faith to prosecutors.

Meanwhile, Attorney General Janet Reno filed appeals court papers saying Secret Service personnel should not have to answer certain questions about what they saw or heard regarding President Clinton and Lewinsky. Chief U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson has ruled that two Secret Service officers and an agency lawyer must testify in Starr's probe.

The Secret Service says a narrowly drawn "protective function privilege" — keeping agency personnel from testifying about what they see or hear while guarding the president — is indispensable to performing their mission.

Horse show raises money for Manhattan club

Angela Kistner
Kansas State Collegian

Many horse riders from northeast Kansas came to Fort Riley on Saturday to compete in the Northeast Kansas Hunter Association horse show.

The Flint Hills Pony Club from Manhattan sponsored the show to raise money for the club.

Ardis Eakin, Flint Hills Pony Club volunteer, said there were nearly 50 to 60 participants at the horse show. The participants' ages ranged from seven to adult.

The horse show consisted of 33 classes. The first two classes were for green riders or green horses, meaning it is either the horse's or the rider's first time competing in a horse show.

The classes are divided into jumping classes and flat classes.

Carla Schroller, Flint Hills Pony Club volunteer, said that during a flat class, riders walk, trot and canter their horses according to what the judge signals to them to do.

"When they start jumping, they start over jumps that are 18 inches tall," Schroller said, "and then throughout the day the classes become more advanced."

The highest height riders jumped their horses over was three feet.

Schroller said there are many criteria on which the horses and riders are judged.

"Sometimes you judge the horse, and sometimes you judge the rider," she said.

A few of the things the judge looks at are obedience of the horse, talent of jumps, consistency and responsiveness, Schroller said.

"They're not supposed to falter. They're supposed to do what the riders tell them to do. They're supposed to be graceful," she said.

Schroller said it is the rider's job to tell the horse where to go. There are different patterns the horse and rider have to follow while jumping. Riders memorize the pattern before they ride.

People not familiar with horse shows might have wondered why the riders were dressed so warmly on such a hot day. They wore long pants and long-sleeved shirts, and some wore black coats.

"This is a real traditional sport. You wear certain things, and you don't wear certain things," she said.

Schroller said Saturday's horse show was informal because the judge waived the coat-wearing requirement.

Gentry Horigan, 13, of Manhattan, said she has participated in horse shows for three years.

"I've always loved horses, and when I was nine, my dad bought me a pony," she said. "When I came to Manhattan, I trained with my trainer, and then I was hooked."

Horigan already had placed second in one of the classes, with five more classes to participate in later that day.

The Flint Hills Pony Club does more than sponsor and participate in horse shows.

The members attend rallies where many pony clubs get together and have competitions. They play polocross, which is lacrosse played on horseback. Eakin said the club has a three-day clinic and camp where the members learn how to play. They also have camps and participate in Knowdown.

Eakin said Knowdown is a competition against other pony clubs in which knowledge about horses is tested.

"It's kind of like Hi-Q on TV, only with horses," she said.

There is no riding involved in the competition.

Vicki Buel, Flint Hills Pony Club volunteer, said one of the big things the pony club participates in is The Festival.

She said this is the national competition in Lexington, Ky. Buel said there are 10 days of national competitions where participants compete in classes and games.

The Flint Hills Pony Club's next horse show is September 12 at Manhattan's CiCo Park.

WILDCAT ATHLETES SCORE HONORS

MANHATTAN — Nathan Leeper, sophomore in open option, followed up his NCAA high-jump title with a second-place finish at the USA Outdoor Championships in New Orleans, setting a personal best with a jump of 7 feet 6 1/2 inches.

Two Wildcats also placed in the hammer throw at the championships. Renetta Seiler, senior in elementary education, took fifth place, and Anna Whitham, senior in marketing and international business, finished 19th.

Adding to K-State's summer success, Lena Piliptchak, graduate in social sciences, pulled down a hat trick of academic honors since finishing her tennis career at K-State. Piliptchak was named to the 1998 GTE Academic All-District VII Spring At-Large Team, the All-America Spring At-Large Second Team and won a $2,500 Big 12 Conference Postgraduate Scholarship.

Music camp comes to K-State campus

Diana Lee
Kansas State Collegian

Campus is alive with the sound of 65 junior high and high school musicians.

The K-State Music Camp, which began on Sunday, brought in students who are interested in a summer music experience.

Frank Tracz, director of K-State bands, said there are many similar camps across the state of Kansas.

"It gives them a different perspective and a chance to be directed by a number of different directors with varying approaches. It really does a service to the community," he said.

The students are participating in a variety of activities.

"There are some large band rehearsals, jazz-band groups, small ensembles and lecture demonstrations," Tracz said. "They also get some recreation time, so they get to have fun and mess around too."

The camp also draws prospective students to campus.

"It's never too soon to get kids on campus and start recruiting them to come to K-State," Tracz said.

Some students use the camp as an opportunity to get a feel for K-State.

"I came to this camp because I wanted to see K-State, but I also wanted to get away from the people I normally come to camp with," said Tarrie Crnic, senior from Russell High School.

Others said they see it as a chance to make early connections.

"I want to come to K-State when I graduate, so I came to help myself get affiliated with the music department," said Janet Spring, senior from Topeka High School.

There is no selection process or contest to qualify for the camp. To attend, students fill out an application and pay an attendance fee.

If interested students are unable to afford the fee, they are not turned away.

"We work with them and absorb some of the cost," Tracz said. "We work very hard to get kids here. There are anonymous donors who provide financial assistance to those who need it."

GRANT GOOD PLAYS HIS BARITONE WHILE REHEARSING FOR K-STATE MUSIC CAMP ON MONDAY AFTERNOON IN ALL FAITHS CHAPEL. GOOD IS FROM RANDOLPH MIDDLE SCHOOL, BLUE VALLEY, KAN.

Staff members include band directors and some students.

"We've hired band directors from across the state to come in and instruct different areas," Tracz said. "Most of them are K-State graduates, so it gets band directors old and new back on campus."

Tracz said it is also an opportunity to spend time away from home.

"They get to leave home for a while and live in the dorms, which allows them to get a feel for the college experience," he said.

The dorm experience is one that will affect some of the students in their future decisions.

"I've been to camps and stayed in the dorms before, but I'm not positive I could handle it for a whole year," Crnic said.

The campers will return to their homes on Thursday, following a showcase of their skills in the All Faiths Chapel at 6:30 p.m.

Low fuel, gas-tank handle, modifications possible factors in singer's plane crash

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Low fuel, a hard-to-reach handle to switch gas tanks and modifications to his homemade airplane might have figured in the crash that killed singer John Denver last year, federal investigators said Monday.

The National Transportation Safety Board, wrapping up the fact-finding phase of its investigation into the crash last Oct. 12, also confirmed that Denver lacked an aviation medical certificate — a requirement for a valid pilot's license — at the time of the crash.

The Federal Aviation Administration had disqualified Denver for the certificate in March 1997, after learning that he had violated a previous FAA order to abstain from drinking. Denver had received the warning in 1995 after being arrested for drunken driving. An autopsy showed no signs of alcohol or drugs at the time of the plane crash off the California coast.

While drawing no conclusions, the report suggests factors that might have contributed to crash that killed the 53-year-old singer-songwriter, famous for such hits as "Rocky Mountain High" and "Sunshine On My Shoulders."

First, Denver's plane almost certainly was low on fuel when he took off from the Monterey Peninsula Airport in the late afternoon to practice takeoffs and landings. Denver had bought the plane only two weeks earlier from another pilot.

In the interim, the plane was taken on a test flight, flown to Monterey and then flown on the day of the crash. Investigators said that activity would have used 12 to 17 gallons of gas, but the last known quantity on board was 15 gallons before the test flight. There was no record of Denver refueling the plane.

Although investigators determined the engine still was running at the time of the crash, witnesses reported hearing a "pop" or "backfire," along with reduced engine noise, just before the plane plunged into the sea about 150 yards off shore.

If one of the two fuel tanks had gone dry and the engine had started to sputter, there were indications that Denver would have had trouble switching to the other tank.

The plans for his homemade Long E-Z say that the fuel selector handle — which switches the fuel flow between the left and right tanks — should be located between the pilot's legs. But the plane's builder, aircraft maker Adrian Davis Jr., said he put it behind the pilot's left shoulder because he did not want fuel in the cockpit.

On the day of the crash, Denver and a maintenance technician talked about the inaccessibility of the handle.

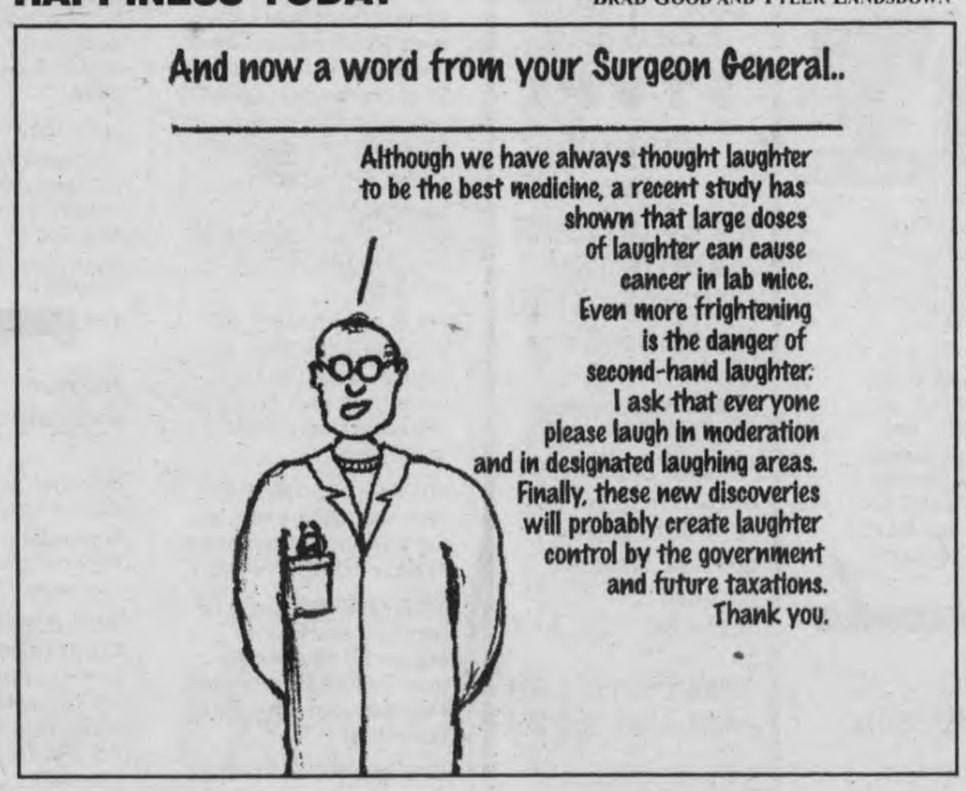
"They tried a pair of Vice Grip pliers on the handle to extend the reach of the handle, but this did not work," the report said.

Under those circumstances, the pilot would have had to remove his shoulder harness, turn around and switch the handle.

"Two pilots shared experiences of having inadvertently run a fuel tank dry with near catastrophic consequences because of the selector and (fuel) gauge locations," the report said.

According to the report, Denver's plane had another modification besides the fuel selector location: a 150-horsepower engine.

That was bigger than the design specifications of a 110- to 115-horsepower engine and consumed more gas than the standard engine.



The plane's designer said he had heard of some builders installing up to 200-horsepower engines with no problems.

The report also said there was no evidence of a bird strike, as some had speculated.

The safety board will use the report in determining the probable cause of the crash.

Addition made to 'NYPD Blues'

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Former "Silver Spoons" child star Rick Schroder is reporting for duty at "NYPD Blue" as Andy Sipowicz's new partner.

Schroder, 28, will replace Jimmy Smits, who announced earlier he is leaving the show after four years.

Smits will appear in an undetermined number of episodes this fall while his character, Bobby Simone, is written out of the show.

"Schroder is a wonderful young actor who will bring tremendous energy to 'NYPD Blue' and allow us writers to approach our sixth season and beyond with fresh ideas," producer Steven Bochco said.

Sipowicz is played by three-time Emmy winner Dennis Franz.

HEROES

Indonesian protesters called heroes of movement

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Indonesia's president on Monday called four student protesters shot to death by security forces last month heroes of the country's reform movement.

"In my view, they are heroes, and I declare them heroes," President B.J. Habibie said during a meeting with the parents of the dead students at Jakarta's state palace. "We hope their sacrifice will not be wasted."

The four students were gunned down on May 12 during a pro-reform rally at Jakarta's Trisakti University. The military has charged 18 police officers in their deaths.

The deaths triggered a wave of rioting that killed nearly 1,200 people and helped force out former President Suharto after 32 years in power.

Since assuming the presidency, Habibie has promised sweeping reforms, including free and fair elections next year.

Habibie said the government would pay medical bills for an injured student who remains unconscious in an intensive care unit at a Jakarta hospital. He did not say whether compensation would be paid to the dead students' families.

Police detain woman as suspect in March murder

BELOIT, Kan. — A 24-year-old woman is being held in Beloit on a Las Vegas murder warrant in the death of a man found in a motel.

Crystal Marie Wise of Las Vegas was arrested June 16 in Beloit by city police, sheriff's officers and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

Wise is wanted in connection with the murder of Timothy Odom, 30, of Las Vegas, whose body was found March 29 by Las Vegas police. He had been beaten to death with an unknown weapon, Las Vegas Police Lt. Wayne Petersen said.

Las Vegas officers got a tip that Wise had been seen in the Simpson area, where her mother lives.

Wise's mother wasn't identified by either Las Vegas or Mitchell County authorities.

Court makes it harder for harassed students to win

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court made it much harder for students who are sexually harassed by teachers to hold school districts financially responsible, ruling Monday that a key anti-bias law applies only if administrators know about the misconduct.

By a 5-4 vote, the court killed a lawsuit against a Texas public school district over a teacher's sexual relationship with a ninth-grade student.

Damages may not be recovered unless an official who has authority to do something about the problem "has actual notice of and is deliberately indifferent to the teacher's misconduct," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the court.

In a biting dissent, Justice John Paul Stevens accused the court of ranking "protection of the school district's purse above the protection of immature high school students."

The decision was called "unfortunate and wrong" by Steven Shapiro of the American Civil Liberties Union, who said it left "no effective remedy for students who are sexually victimized by their teachers."

But Virginia Collier, who was superintendent of the Lago Vista, Texas, school district when it was sued in the case, said the ruling was logical because officials "had absolutely zero reason to know what was going on."

"Schools can't protect students from everything," she said. "We love and care for the children in our schools and we are doing our best to protect them, but we are only human. We can't be all things," she said.

Moving closer to the end of its 1997-98 term, the court also:

—Ruled in a California case that the federal government cannot always seize all the money people try to take outside the United States without filing the proper reports. It marked the first time in the court's history a fine had been struck down as unconstitutional.

—Upheld the revocation of a Pennsylvania man's parole even though evidence against him may have been obtained in an illegal search. The longtime rule that bars unlawfully seized evidence from criminal trials does not apply to parole-revocation hearings, the court ruled.

—Rejected an impassioned appeal by Alabama Gov. Fob James, slowing his crusade for student-led prayers in the state's public schools.

—Refused to revive a New Jersey woman's sex-bias lawsuit against an employer who eliminated her job while she was on maternity leave.

—Agreed to consider setting aside, for a second time, a $1.5 billion settlement of the Fibreboard Corp.'s legal liability for asbestos-related claims. A decision is expected sometime in 1999.

The court's ruling about sexually harassed students was based on its interpretation of a federal law best known for bolstering women's sports.

The law, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, bars sex bias by "any educational program or activity receiving federal financial assistance" — making it applicable to the vast majority of public and private schools.

The Supreme Court ruled in 1992 that sexually harassed students may collect monetary damages from their schools and school officials under Title IX, but that decision did not state what standard should be used for imposing school district liability for a teacher's acts.

Monday's decision makes that standard one students rarely will be able to meet.

Students still can invoke a federal civil-rights law to sue and win monetary damages against wayward teachers, but now must rely on state laws in efforts to hold school districts accountable. State-court lawsuits have proved virtually futile to date.

"Unless Congress speaks directly on the subject ... we will not hold a school district liable in damages under Title IX for a teacher's sexual harassment of a student absent actual notice and deliberate indifference," O'Connor wrote.

She was joined by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia, Anthony M. Kennedy and Clarence Thomas.

Stevens was joined in his dissent by Justices David H. Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

The decision does not apply to on-the-job sexual harassment, which is governed by a separate federal law. The justices are expected to have more to say about sexual harassment in employment — and the liability of unknowing employers — in a pair of decisions to be announced later this week or early next.

The Texas dispute dates back to 1993 when police found Frank Waldrop, a social studies teacher at a Lago Vista high school, naked in the woods with a 15-year-old student.

According to the lawsuit, the 15-year-old and her mother later filed against the school district, the sexual relationship had lasted for about six months.

Waldrop quickly was fired and later stripped of his teaching certificate. He eventually pleaded no contest to a charge of attempted sexual assault.

HIT AND RUN

RCPD charges man allegedly involved in accident last week

A man has been charged in connection with a hit and run that occurred on June 15.

Fourteen-year-old James Mills was riding his bicycle south on North Manhattan Avenue north of Claflin Road when he was hit and injured by a vehicle that left the scene.

Lt. Gary Grubbs of the Riley County Police Department said Robert W. Snell, of Grandview Plaza, Kan., has been charged with leaving the scene of an injury accident, failure to report, failure to give aid and improper right turn. Snell's bond was set at $500.

Grubbs said Snell was stopped by a highway patrolman the day after the accident. He said the highway patrolman thought the description of Snell's vehicle fit the description given by eyewitnesses of the vehicle involved in the hit-and-run.

Snell was brought in for DUI, was questioned the next day by RCPD officers and was arrested, Grubbs said.

JOHN STAMEY, SENIOR IN BIOLOGICAL/AGRICULTURAL ENGINEERING, PADDLES ALONG WITH TWO CHILDREN PARTICIPATING IN THE WONDER WORKSHOP ON TUESDAY IN TUTTLE COVE.

Workshop offers hands-on activities

Cait Purinton
Kansas State Collegian

School is out, but many children are keeping busy this summer by continuing their education at the Wonder Workshop Children's Museum.

The Wonder Workshop offers children hands-on activities in science, the fine arts, history and humanities that are not offered anywhere else in Manhattan.

MORE INFO
People interested in volunteering at Wonder Workshop can call Richard Pitts at 776-1234.

"We tried to be diverse culturally and ethnically," said Mary Stamey, principal at Roosevelt and Eugene Field schools and member of the board of directors.

The Wonder Workshop is open to the public all year, six days a week. It targets kindergarten through sixth-grade children, who attend different camps, such as those in archaeology, sports, art and nature.

"What sets it apart is the Wonder Workshop incorporates learning about different cultures, and it excites children into that science," said Corey Gordon, senior in public relations and intern this summer at the children's museum.

Gordon said it is an original thing because it involves the community and the children in the community.

> "WHAT SETS IT APART IS THE WONDER WORKSHOP INCORPORATES LEARNING ABOUT DIFFERENT CULTURES, AND IT EXCITES CHILDREN INTO THAT SCIENCE."
> COREY GORDON
> senior in public relations

Stamey said she has helped the Wonder Workshop develop from its beginning as a special-education unit at Amanda Arnold Elementary School.

In April, the Wonder Workshop, in collaboration with the school, moved into its current address at 821 Poyntz Ave.

Now the house has four exhibit rooms, including an Egyptian exhibit complete with artifacts donated by members of the Manhattan community.

In the archaeology exhibit, the children made a papier-maché mummy, and there is a box to do an archaeological dig to uncover a hidden city.

Samantha Fugate-Axelton, 6, has been going to the Wonder Workshop since January and said she likes the archaeology room.

"I like finding stuff and digging. I like getting dirty," she said.

The Wonder Workshop has a science room, art room, game room, woodshop and preschool-sensory room with a large dry-erase board, felt board and a bathtub full of dirt in which children can dig up dinosaurs.

"It's so easy to spend one hour there and not realize it," Stamey said.

Workshop Director Richard Pitts said the Wonder Workshop's goal is to awaken creativity in kids and adults and to bring out the kid in everyone through the exhibits.

He said usually every kid will find something towards which they can gravitate, and there is something there for everyone.

Nature camp draws the biggest interest because the children go horseback riding, fishing and canoeing.

Amy Rintoul, 15, attended the Wonder Workshop when she was in the sixth grade and now volunteers there.

She said she helps with the nature activities because she grew up with nature.

Rintoul said the best part of the camp is it offers creativity and let children think for themselves.

"It's OK as long they're not hurting anyone else," she said.

Gordon said the Wonder Workshop has an excellent volunteer staff that gives countless hours to helping children.

Katie Lane, 16, started volunteering in September of 1997 as part of a psychology class that required 15 hours of community service for a project. She said she got a sense of satisfaction from knowing she reached the children.

"I like just being with the kids," Lane said.

Students find chances to earn quick cash

Brian R. Crisp
Kansas State Collegian

Students who need emergency money for that concert ticket or even that dream date have a number of options.

Manhattan Biomedical Center offers cash for donating plasma. Plasma is the fluid part of whole blood. Jason Banks, assistant manager, said students who donate plasma can receive between $30 and $35 per week. The amount received depends on the amount donated, which depends on the weight of the person, Banks said.

Anyone interested first must pass the physical examination and blood-screening process.

Also, one must weigh 110 pounds or more to donate. The amount of money people can make giving plasma depends on their weight. Banks said most people earn around $140 per month on the average.

The process of donating plasma takes about an hour, and during this time, people have the option of reading magazines or watching movies, Banks said.

An alternative to selling one's vital fluids is selling one's compact discs and tapes, said Sarah Cunnick, assistant manager of Streetside Records.

"I think people let go of their blood easier than they let go of their CDs," Cunnick said.

Nevertheless, Streetside receives between 20 and 60 CDs per day. Each CD can earn a student anywhere from $1 to $6.

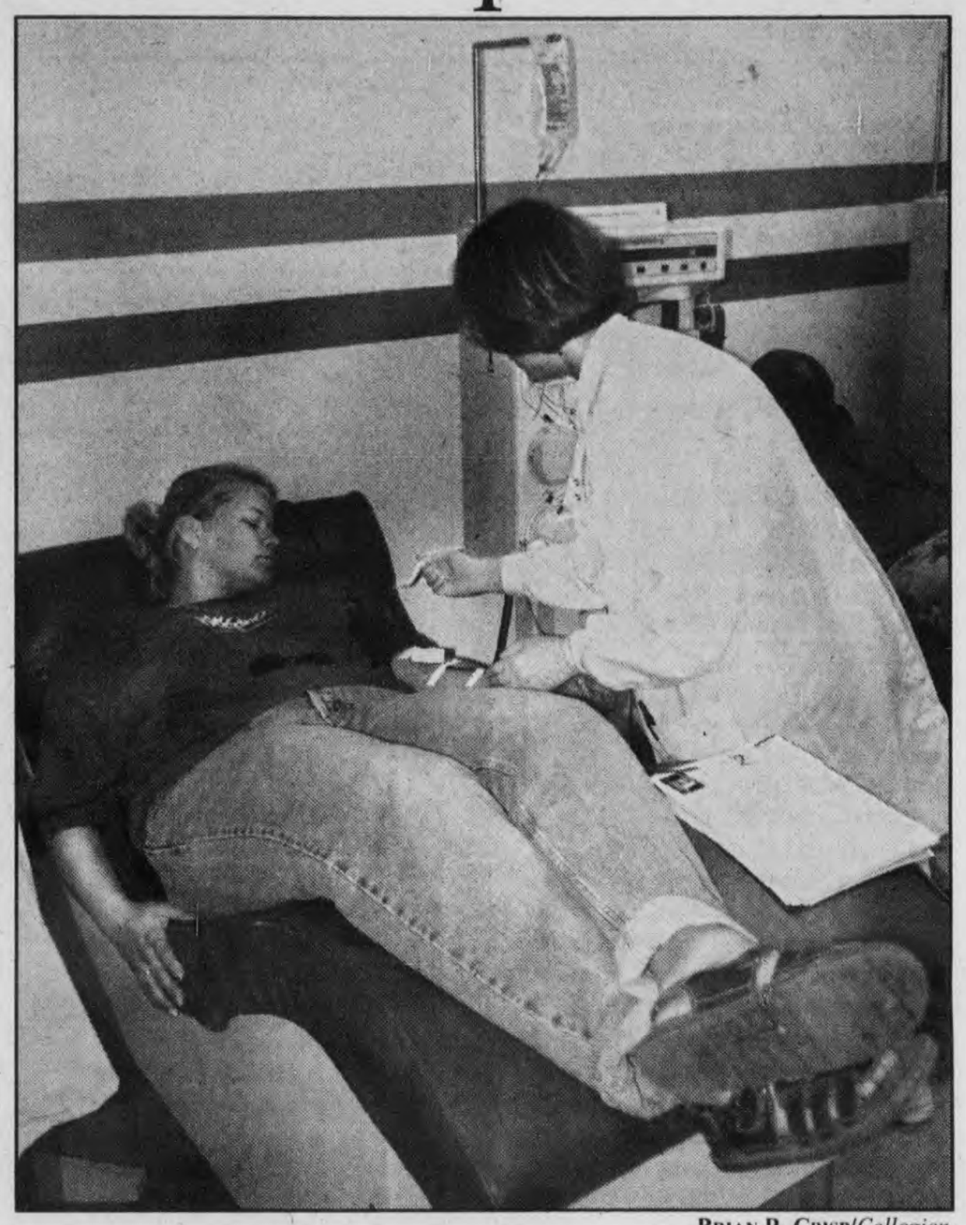
"We buy all different kinds of CDs, it really doesn't matter. However, the computer determines whether or not we'll take it," Cunnick said.

The computer calculates the number sold and compares that to how many are in stock. This determines how much will be paid for the CD.

A third way of getting cash fast is by pawning items of value. If you have a musical instrument or a tool set that is gathering dust, you can get a quick loan from any of the local pawn shops.

"We take merchandise as a collateral for loans," said Mark Goodenow, sales representative for Manhattan Pawn Shop.

Students can bring in items of value to be appraised. Then they have the option of receiving a loan equal to a percentage of the value of the item. The amount loaned depends on the item, Goodenow said.



Typically, electronics and stereo equipment get a higher percentage than jewelry. This is due to the high markup of jewelry, Goodenow said.

If the item is not bought back by the person within 90 days, it becomes the property of the shop and can be sold. If 90 days isn't enough time, a one-month extension can be bought for 10 percent of the price of the item.

All of the above businesses have seen trends throughout the school year.

"When students come back after summer jobs and start running out of money about the end of October, beginning of November, this is when we see an increase in business," Banks said. "Immediately after winter break and before spring break are also busy times," Banks said.

"When student loan money runs out, that's when we see an increase in business," Goodenow said.

Care should be taken as summer temperatures soar

Summer began Sunday and wasted no time before showing its wrath. The temperatures will be lunging towards the hundreds over the coming days, prodding heat indexes way above the level of human comfort.

Besides just being uncomfortable, the heat can be deadly. Heat exhaustion comes from over-exertion in the sun.

Symptoms of heat exhaustion are facial discoloration, cold or clammy skin, heavy perspiration, nausea and vomiting. Heat exhaustion can lead to heat stroke, a serious medical condition that can cause a person to lose consciousness or die.

There are plenty of ways to beat the heat in Manhattan in addition to the traditional summer fun of swimming pools.

Both Hale Library and Manhattan Public Library have been renovated in the past few years and, most importantly during the heat, have air conditioning. Summer is a great time to peruse leisurely through a library.

While in the mood to expand your horizons, take a trip to the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

Exercising in the heat can be dangerous. The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex offers a variety of ways to stay fit without risking your health.

An age-old way to stay cool on a summer afternoon is to take in a movie. The combination of a cold drink, a bag of popcorn and a summer blockbuster is a great way to forget the heat for a few hours.

There are bowling lanes, video games, pool tables and other amusements at K-State Student Union, all offering the opportunity to have fun without breaking too much of a sweat.

Be creative when looking for ways to stay cool this summer, and be attentive to the signs of heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

Movie explores pervasiveness of TV addiction

MY VIEW

ERIC GOOLD

I am an addict.

During the work day, I count the seconds until 5:00. When it finally arrives, I flee for home, licking my lips in anticipation of my impending fix. My body starts shaking when I'm halfway home, and now I'm running to get there. My jones is officially ugly: I'm drooling, panting and demanding satisfaction.

I burst through the front door of my pad, which explodes open like a bloated zit. There is my baby, my drug, set up valiantly in the living room. My strength exhausted, I fall to my knees before the mighty narcotic. Like Moses in the desert, I am at a spiritual and physical moment of epiphany when I embrace my beloved TV set and scream, "I'll never leave you again!"

I turn her on, and her warm glow immediately soothes me. My jones satiated, I sit back in my easy chair and lapse into the truest TV high: Alex Trebek and "Jeopardy!" My eyes glaze over, spit dribbles unnoticed out of the corners of my mouth (eventually I'll have to invest in a drool cup) and I ride the sickening waves of a Magnavox injection.

I became a TV junkie, along with the rest of my family, when I was but a wee lad. Sadly, the drug was as easy to get as a dime bag at a Phish concert, and I didn't even have to pay for it.

In the early years of the Reagan dictatorship, my family (along with the majority of the brain-dead population — this was the TV president, for God's sake) measured the passage of time according to TV nights. Thursday: "The Cosby Show," "Family Ties," "Cheers," "Night Court" and "Hill Street Blues." That is still, in one man's opinion, the best lineup network television ever produced. Friday: "The A-Team" and "Miami Vice." Watching those not only gave you the necessary TV junk, but also a blast of testosterone.

MARNY BURKE/Collegian

And the cartoons! Running home from elementary school, I craved this glorious lineup: "Thundercats," "GI Joe," "Tranzor Z" and "Voltron." Nothing like two solid hours of violence for America's youngsters. Not only that, but I got to enjoy the lineup every day of the school week.

America's addiction to the box is a hot topic this summer. Three movies are coming out, supposedly containing profound and scathing new looks on how addicted we really are. There's an irony right there, of course: in order to learn about how addicted we are to television, we shell out cash for a movie.

I did just that last week when I saw the first of these films, "The Truman Show." While the movie was well-directed and well-acted, I am forced to wonder about its message.

The movie tells the tale of a future TV show that fully exploits a man by showing his life as a TV show without letting him in on it. Are we supposed to feel bad for this guy? Everyone in the theater did, I thought. They fell for it hook, line and sinker.

What the sympathizers failed to notice is that they are the ones who fuel this demon, television. I find it entirely plausible that in the future, in order to make television more interesting, networks will start exploiting the population fully and putting their lives on the screen. Not only will it happen, but America will love it. Think of the O.J. Simpson trial and all that. We'll all just be more than happy to watch someone's "real" life unfold in the "fake" world of television.

Everyone thinks this movie is such a big deal because it demonstrates how addicted we are to television. Tell us something we didn't know. I think about how addicted I am to television every day, usually when I'm sitting in front of my baby in my underwear, with my feet up, the remote control in one hand and a box of Ding Dongs in the other.

There is only one solution, of course. Turn the damn thing off. That's a skill I have yet to master.

Lack of portable toilets, water supply challenge columnist's will despite good cause

MY VIEW

BRANDI HERTIG

It was one of the stupidest things I have ever done.

Sunday morning, 20,000 of my closest friends and I decided to run in the inaugural Suzuki Rock 'n' Roll Marathon in San Diego. That's 26.2 miles of pure running enjoyment. Of course, the first guy to ever run that distance died shortly thereafter, but who's keeping score?

I joined the Leukemia Society's Team in Training in February because it seemed like a good cause, and I needed something to do while waiting for my recently shorn hair to grow back. The Leukemia Society was represented by about 6,000 runners clad in the same purple Team in Training singlets from individual state chapters in the Rock 'n' Roll Marathon, raising more than $15 million for cancer research — a record amount.

That's the good part — the worthwhile part, the part that sees that more people don't die needlessly from leukemia and other forms of cancer. That's the part that would make me and everyone else run the whole thing again.

What I hadn't really considered before was the word marathon. I held off on doing that until I was waiting to check my luggage at Kansas City International Airport — surely not the best time to do such. The word is usually used to describe something of grandiose length.

The race started 45 minutes late, which caused all the pre-race water to worm its way down to about 20,000 bladders. And since people generally do not have to pee like crazy at the beginning of a marathon, there were no Port-A-Potties to be found along the first four miles or so. This is the point in our story when we realize participating in such an event is like having a huge family, with absolutely no inhibitions between any two members.

Probably no where else in this country except in a marathon will you see men lined up along walls in parking lots, spraying the asphalt with what was ailing them. And despite their lack of proper equipment for proper and semi-discreet public urination, women were not to be left out on the relief.

Call me a prude, but I let my bladder slosh around for about 6 miles until I found a toilet.

Through the first five or six miles, the water stations were seriously undermanned, which caused some serious turmoil among us runners in the lovely Southern California heat. A person with a hose filled cups at random, and the only situation I can remotely liken it to would be that of a concentration camp.

Of course that's all a little hyperbolic of me, but there is something quite survivalist about tons of half-clad sweaty people vying for a bit of water. As the race went on, the water situation straightened itself out, which made dehydration the least of my worries.

As we continued on, I started to feel sorry for all of the people who weren't participating in the marathon as Team in Training members. People on the sidelines cheered on every person they saw in a Team in Training shirt. I also couldn't figure out why someone would actually want to run a marathon for no reason at all except to just do it.

The further I went, the more I realized that all of us in the marathon really were like a family to each other, and not because we had to see virtually everyone pee. There's kind of an internal-support system going on with everyone. We knew we were all in it together, and offered each other encouragement along the way.

Before I left for the marathon, I would joke that the last point two miles is the longest part of the whole marathon. I sure wasn't yuking it up when I passed the 26th mile marker and saw the finish line hovering in the distance. The more I ran, the more it seemed like the arch of balloons pulled itself away, much like the time on "Scooby Doo" where Scooby and Shaggy get lost in the desert and they see mirages.

I crossed the finish line over an hour later than I anticipated I would, and I was disappointed until I realized that it was something of a miracle I had finished at all – the race had a 25-percent dropout rate. It was never an option for me to quit, not because I've got this will o' iron, but because my Team in Training chapter was told that every single person who participated in a marathon from the Kansas chapter finished.

Also, I couldn't imagine what I would say to all of the generous people who donated money to the Leukemia Society on my behalf. And now I'm sunburned, sore and practically immobile.

It was one of the stupidest things I have ever done – and I'm so glad I did it. And I'd do it again.

KASHMIR TERRORISM

Blast derails train in Kashmir, injuring 13

JAMMU, India — A bomb exploded on the tracks Tuesday minutes after the Shalimar Express left Jammu, Kashmir's winter capital, derailing eight train cars and injuring 13 people, officials said.

The blast occurred as the New Delhi-bound passenger train passed Bari Brahmana station, six miles south of the state capital, Dr. Jasbir Singh said.

Singh, who works at a city government hospital, said an injured passenger told him rescue operations were hampered because there were no lights in the thickly forested area. The doctor would not disclose the passenger's name.

The passenger said eight cars derailed, a count confirmed by police and rail officials.

Police officer Ghulam Mohammad said the bomb had been planted on the tracks.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the bombing.

Militants have been fighting Indian security forces since 1989 demanding freedom for Kashmir, where Muslims are in a majority. Hindus account for 82 percent of India's nearly 1 billion population.

Wheat harvest wraps up in southern counties

HARVESTERS TO MOVE INTO NORTHWEST KANSAS BY END OF WEEK.

Associated Press

WICHITA — All areas of Kansas are now taking in wheat, the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers reported Tuesday.

Northwest Kansas — including Goodland, Colby and Atwood areas — has taken a few samples and should begin cutting by the end of this week.

The rest of the state is cutting, although the weekend's rain has slowed progress in some parts.

"The harvest was going very fast until the rains came," Darrin Hibdon, Franklin County extension agent, said.

Some areas have had rain, ranging from a few sprinkles to downpours, almost daily for the past few days. The rains have forced many farmers to park their combines until their fields dry out and hope hail doesn't destroy their crop before they can finish the harvest.

"It's come to a screeching halt," said Ralph Ferguson, of Beachner Grain Co. in Richmond.

Across southern and south-central Kansas, the harvest almost has ended. Fields are 85-percent cut south of a line extending from Liberal to Meade to McPherson, east through Hillsboro and southeast through the El Dorado area, the association said in its daily harvest report.

The Anderson County harvest was in high gear when 3 to 5 inches of rain fell over the weekend, Jill Zimmerman, Anderson County Extension agent, said.

"There are a lot of guys who are done, but there are a lot of guys who still have wheat to harvest," she said.

Given the boggy conditions of many fields, it might be at least a week before cutting resumes, she said.

For now, the delay doesn't threaten standing wheat except for small declines in yields and quality.

But if the rain continues and harvest is delayed into July, yields and quality could decline significantly, Zimmerman said.

Belleville, in north-central Kansas, started cutting over the weekend, but shut down because of rain. United Grain Inc. in Belleville expected cutting to begin Wednesday or Thursday.

In south-central Kansas, Halstead's Farmers Co-op elevator reports harvest is finished in its area. Yields there averaged about 40 bushels per acre, with test weights between 61 and 62 pounds per bushel.

Protein levels ran a low of 9.5 to 11 percent, with one test coming in at 12.7 percent. No storage problems were reported.

Parts of northwest Kansas are anticipating lower test weights and yields because of heat stress and drought over the past few weeks. Atwood is now more than 4 inches below normal precipitation for the year. Samples taken so far have turned up shriveled wheat and test weights in the mid-50s.

The most significant problem for the wheat harvest isn't rain, test weights or storage space, Ferguson said.

"The problem is, wheat is about a dollar a bushel too cheap," he said. "That's where the problem is."

Brett brothers forego opportunity to buy Royals with Chiefs' owner

BASEBALL BROTHERS WON'T JOIN LAMAR HUNT IN BID FOR KC ROYALS.

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A group led by former Kansas City star George Brett reportedly has rejected a proposal to join Chiefs owner Lamar Hunt and his group in joint ownership of the Royals, a combination regarded as a dream team by most area fans.

The group led by Brett and his brother, Bobby, reportedly were offered a chance to buy a 5- to 10-percent share of the team by the group of Hunt and Western Resources Inc., The Kansas City Star reported Tuesday.

But the Bretts were rebuffed in their demand that George Brett be made team president. Bobby Brett would not have been offered anything other than being a consultant to the team, The Star reported.

The paper quoted an unnamed source as calling the Brett demands "preposterous."

"You're not going to cut someone in for a minority share and then make them the team president," the source said.

Another source told The Star the 24- to 48-hour deadline to decide on the proposal was not enough time for the Bretts.

George Brett is currently a vice president of the team. He could not be reached for comment, and Bobby Brett declined comment.

Hunt and Tin Connolly, the president of Hunt Sports Group, were traveling from France after attending World Cup matches and could not be reached. Hunt Sports Group is the arm of Hunt's enterprises that would own the team with Western Resources.

Hunt's son, Clark, is expected to be named team president if the Royals' board of directors selects the Hunt bid.

MORE INFO
To read more about what is going on with the Royals, go to its official home page at www.kcroyals.com.

Hunt, Brett and New York lawyer E. Miles Prentice III are the only ones to have identified themselves publicly as bidders.

Royals president Mike Herman said last month that the board had received a number of credible bids from other, unidentified bidders.

The initial, non-binding bids were reviewed by the New York investment firm J.P. Morgan & Co.

Bids deemed to be qualified were to be returned to a three-member committee of the Royals board that has run the team since the death of founder Ewing Kauffman in 1993.

The bidders then would make further review of the Royals' books before deciding whether to submit final bids. The committee then will make a recommendation to the full board.

Herman has said the board hopes to make a selection by the All-Star break.

Kauffman established a complicated succession plan in which all money generated by the sale of the team will go to area charities.

The board had set a minimum sale price of $75 million, but J.P. Morgan earlier indicated the team was worth more than that.

The top prerequisite for any successful bidder is a commitment to keep the team in Kansas City, and Herman has said the board would take a lower bid for a stronger commitment.

Kauffman's desire to have the team remain in Kansas City was the main reason that made the Brett-Hunt combination seem so attractive.

Brett, certain to go into the Hall of Fame, played his entire career with the Royals and lives in the area. Hunt, although he lives in Dallas, has seen his Chiefs become widely popular, and owns the city's MLS franchise as well as a large amusement park.

Police say, priest stabbed himself in suicide attempt

WARREN, Ohio — A priest who blamed intruders for stabbing him 88 times actually stabbed himself in a suicide attempt, police said Tuesday.

The Rev. Thomas Spisak, 55, was suffering from depression after having heart surgery in March, police chief Albert Timko said.

Spisak, pastor of the Christ Our King and Sts. Cyril and Methodius parishes in this eastern Ohio city, was in stable condition Tuesday at St. Elizabeth Health Center in Youngstown. His injuries include two serious chest wounds, Timko said.

Spisak had told police in a recorded 911 call on June 14 that two male intruders had broken into the rectory at Christ Our King the previous night while he was sleeping.

"I was attacked by two men and knifed, and I'm in pretty bad shape," he told police in the call. "They wanted me to open the safe. I didn't open the safe for them. ... I had some money, but I don't think they took it."

In a statement to police on Monday, Spisak admitted he fabricated the story, Timko said.

"The diocese, along with Father Spisak, regrets the pain and suffering that has resulted from any misinformation," Msgr. Robert Siffrin, vicar general for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Youngstown, said Tuesday.

The case file was still open and police could charge Spisak with making a false report, Timko said.

The GOP lawmakers belted out a few standards Monday evening at the $10,000-per-table event, closing with a rendition of "Elvira" by the Oak Ridge Boys, complete with Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott growling its "ummmmh poppa, ummmmh poppa, mau, mau" bass line.

Officials prepare for Stampede

Country Stampede officials are not the only ones busy preparing for the three-day concert that begins Friday at Tuttle Creek State Park.

The park employees at Tuttle Creek have been working on many different projects to prepare for the rush of concert-goers who will attend the concert and camp at the park.

"We have been mowing the last two weeks, trying to catch up because the rain has set us back. We cleaned all the bathrooms and checked the electrical outlets for all the campers that will be coming in," said Dale Schwieger, park ranger at Tuttle Creek. "We started preparing about three weeks ago by doing small projects. We had a few setbacks with heavy winds and rain last Sunday."

Preparing for the third year of Stampede also involved a long-term project for Tuttle Creek in response to the problems with getting drinking water at last year's Stampede.

Country Stampede received a grant to upgrade the water system at Tuttle Creek. It has a new well and high-pressure tank.

The city of Manhattan also has a part in preparing for Stampede. The Manhattan Convention and Visitors Bureau helps people attending the concert find places to stay and go while they are in Manhattan. An information booth will be on the festival grounds just inside the gate on the east end.

The information booth is there to give out information about both the community and the festival. The bureau is a sponsor of the event and serves a variety of roles, said Becky Blake, director of the Convention and Visitors Bureau.

The bureau's part in Stampede is a year-round role.

"Of course, throughout the year, we promote Country Stampede when we promote Manhattan. We also assist Stampede in their marketing," Blake said.

First Aid also will be available to concert-goers at three different locations on the festival grounds.

"We have a multi-tiered plan to our response out there. At any one time we will have two to five crews working," said Larry Couchman, coordinator of EMS and First Aid for Stampede. "We are expecting to be fairly busy."

There will be volunteer firefighters, volunteer registered nurses from Mercy Health Center of Manhattan Inc. and EMS crews from Riley County and First Response working to keep Stampede patrons hydrated and healthy. American Red Cross volunteers also will be assisting.

The Riley County Police Department also is helping out with Stampede.

The RCPD will be directing traffic at the Corps of Engineers turn-in to Tuttle Creek before and after the concert to help with the big rushes, Capt. Alan Ranyor, RCPD, said.

Environmental stress increases during Country Stampede

Danica Coto
Kansas State Collegian

Tuttle Creek State Park's River Pond Area will experience increased environmental stress from the large amounts of traffic Country Stampede will attract.

Todd Lovin, Tuttle Creek park manager, said he expects this event to be even bigger than last year's.

"We see a bunch of problems from the inside, but fortunately the public doesn't see this," Lovin said.

Despite expecting a smooth-running show, Lovin said he fears a lack of rain will not help the environment at Tuttle Creek recover. Soil compaction and grass die-off from increased traffic have been their biggest concerns. Lovin said he expects to re-level some areas after the festival and do some rudding and aeration as well, but there has never been a need to cut down trees and other bushes.

Trash and waste from campers will increase because of the large amount of people concentrated in one area, which also can cause potential problems for the environment at Tuttle Creek.

"People have been pretty good about using common sense," Lovin said. "The impact has been pretty minimal."

Some issues, however, remain unchanged due to money.

Steve Prockish, park ranger at Tuttle, said state officials do not concern themselves as much as they should with damages inflicted on the state park.

"After the first year, damage wasn't as noticeable," Prockish said. "They haven't totally ignored it, but there could probably be more done."

Most of the complaints are about noise pollution, but damage to the turf should be the park's main concern, Prockish said.

"State officials do what the state directs them to do. They do the minimum amount of re-seeding."

To help minimize damage to the environment, Lovin said people need to use the marked parking areas as much as possible. Water usage is another issue of which Lovin said people need to be aware.

"We're having a tough time supplying the water. People still need to be conservative," Lovin said.

Concert-goers have been receptive to the rules, but if there is a violation, park rangers will inform people of it. Recurring problems are drunk driving and impatient people during traffic congestion.

Scott Schwinn, Pottawatomie County sanitarian, said the environment is protected by the contract agreement between state officials and Country Stampede.

"It's a very positive thing that they're doing," Schwinn said. "It's good for the economy."

More than 400 employees ensure proper cleanup of the area.

"As far as having 80,000 (people) there, they're doing exceptionally well," Schwinn said.

After three years of welcoming the festival, Schwinn said state officials learn more every year about how to protect the environment.

Country Stampede brings revenue, visitors to the Manhattan area

Diana Lee
Kansas State Collegian

Country Stampede brings thousands of screaming music fans to the area, and it also draws in their money.

Cheryl Sieben, executive director of the Aggieville Business Association, said she thinks it is good not just for Aggieville, but for the entire community when thousands of people come to the area.

"There are some businesses that will obviously benefit more than others, but the Stampede keeps growing each year, so the overall impact on Aggieville grows each year," she said.

Stampede has less overall effect on Aggieville than an average football game, however.

The football fans are more specifically coming to Aggieville to eat. They also buy K-State clothing and souvenirs, Sieben said.

The Stampede attendees are maybe just coming to eat, purchase gas and go to the country bars. They are two different clienteles that bring in thousands and are both good, she said.

Dustin Jamison, manager of Dean Liquor, said they see an increase in sales, but not as much as stores closer to the event. Dean Liquor is located in Aggieville.

"With our location, they have moderately increased in the past, but it's hard to tell how much it will this year," he said. "We do have some sales on Miller and other things that are geared toward the event, and we've brought in some displays."

Becky Blake, director of the Manhattan Visitors Bureau, said it is anticipating larger crowds and, therefore, greater spending.

"We are estimating the direct spending, excluding what patrons spend on tickets and merchandise at the site, to be around $2 1/2 million," she said.

This is an increase from last year, which was estimated to have been $2 million in spending.

The Stampede has a larger economic effect on the entire area than an individual football game, Blake said.

"We have estimated the average economic impact of a home football game, excluding spending at the games themselves, to be around $1 million," she said. "Country Stampede is roughly equal to two football games."

Blake said there is a reasonable explanation for the large amount of spending at Stampede.

"Part of this event's impact is simply the length of it," she said.

Blake said the event is designed to provide everything patrons need on-site.

"Those camping can find a lot of services they need there, but there is not room for everyone attending to camp there," she said. "Motels are full not just in Manhattan, but in other areas as well. The event is designed to provide most of the services they'll need while on grounds, but there's still significant spending in the area."

Lifeguards do more than get a great tan

Jody Johnson
Kansas State Collegian

Lifeguarding is more than an opportunity to get a good tan — it's a demanding job requiring strength, quick-thinking and life-saving skills.

Lifeguards undergo training to earn their certification. In addition to physical-endurance training, lifeguards are schooled in First Aid and CPR techniques to prepare them for emergency situations at the pool.

Lifeguards have to be aware and always watch the pool, said Chris Post, a Manhattan City Park Swimming Pool head lifeguard.

Post, who has worked at the city pools for five years, said staying alert and being ready to make a rescue requires physical fitness.

"We swim and get in the water regularly to stay fit," Post said.

It's important for lifeguards to pay attention to swimmers regardless of the weather and other distractions.

"You have to be really alert, and it's difficult when there's 104-degree weather and you're tired and hot," Josie Knapp, sophomore in music education, said.

Knapp has been a lifeguard at the city pools for three years, and she said the hardest part of the job is being ready at all times to save a life.

"It's not as easy as it looks. We rarely have to jump in, but when the time comes, we have to be ready," Knapp said.

Lifeguarding requires a lot of concentration, as well as fast reactions, Stephanie Coovert, Manhattan High School senior, said.

Steve Hebert/Collegian

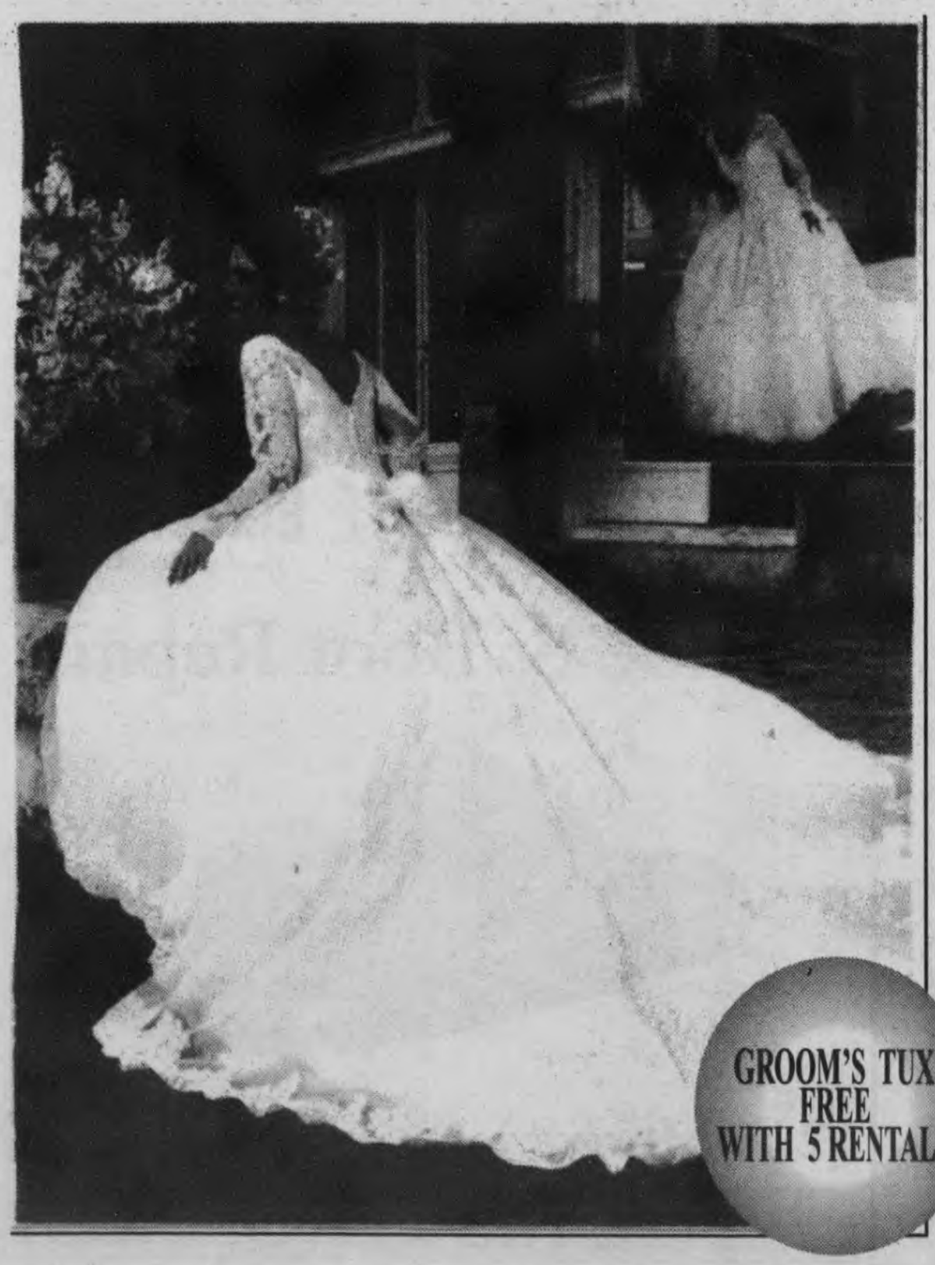
Lifeguard Christina Hoggatt, sophomore in mass communication and pre-medicine, keeps a watchful eye on swimmers Wednesday afternoon at the Manhattan City Park swimming pool.



"You have to stay focused and watch people constantly so you can prevent an emergency before it starts," she said.

Coovert has worked for the city pools for two years and said lifeguarding is a fun and challenging job.

"I encourage it if you can stay focused enough to watch people constantly," she said.

Lifeguard-certification classes are offered by the Red Cross through UFM or Manhattan Parks and Recreation, lifeguard instructor Jason Hampl said.

Participants in the class must be at least 15 years or older and must have minimum competency in swimming. This includes the ability to swim 500 yards, retrieve a brick from the bottom of the pool and tread water for several minutes.

WSU SUIT

Judge dismisses much of poet's suit against WSU

WICHITA — A nationally known poet who accused Wichita State University of unfairly investigating sexual-harassment complaints against him will be allowed to sue only one school official, a judge ruled.

Albert Goldbarth, distinguished professor of English at Wichita State, filed suit in October against the university, two university officials and the Kansas Board of Regents. He also obtained a temporary restraining order to prevent Wichita State from further investigating the allegations.

Goldbarth has denied allegations that he had made sexually inappropriate comments to two female students in 1996.

An initial informal investigation by the school's affirmative-action officer, Barbara Bowman, found no proof of sexual harassment. But Goldbarth said the allegations disturbed him so much he declined offers to publish his poetry in national publications. He sued the school for more than $75,000 in damages.

On Monday, Sedgwick County District Court Judge Keith Anderson dismissed all of Goldbarth's claims except those against Bowman, and he removed the temporary restraining order.

The ruling leaves only one key question for a court to consider: whether Bowman defamed Goldbarth, said Scott Hesse, a state attorney who represents Wichita State.

Bowman's attorney, Wyatt Wright, said Bowman was following federal law and that she showed no bias in the investigation.

UNABOMBER BOOK?

Kaczynski shops book proposal from behind bars

NEW YORK — Unabomber Theodore Kaczynski is shopping for a book publisher from behind bars, the Daily News reported Wednesday.

Kaczynski's handwritten, four-page pitch arrived at Simon & Schuster offices earlier this month, the newspaper said.

Johanna Li, assistant editor at Simon & Schuster, said she opened the envelope despite seeing Kaczynski's name and a prison return address. He said in his book proposal that his lawyers misrepresented him.

Simon & Schuster senior editor Bob Bender said the proposal will be rejected.

Kaczynski pleaded guilty to mailing bombs and threats around the country for 17 years, admitting he was responsible for 16 attacks that killed three people and injured 29 others. He was sentenced to life in prison.

His most infamous writing project was a 35,000-word anti-technology manifesto published under threats of more violence.

Prosecutors at his federal trial in Sacramento, Calif., made a deal to prevent Kaczynski from making money from his tale.

His attorneys did not return phone calls from the Daily News.

Doctors call "Psychos" name offensive; team considers change

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Springfield's new minor-league football team does not even have a roster, and already it is getting jeered.

The problem isn't the team, it's the name — the Springfield Psychos.

"It's extremely upsetting," said Larry Pegg, executive director of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill of Southwest Missouri. "The mentally ill have enough of a stigma without this team."

The flood of letters to the editor in the Springfield News-Leader and phone calls to Southwest Missouri State University, where the team will be playing its games this year, has been so great, the team's management met Wednesday afternoon to discuss changing the name.

Alternatives abound for non-country music fans

Brian R. Crisp
Kansas State Collegian

There are some people, even in Kansas, who don't appreciate country music. With this weekend's Country Stampede taking over Manhattan, many people might feel out of place.

For those who stay in the Little Apple either by choice or by necessity, there are a number of alternatives to this week's country music event. First, for breakfast Saturday, there will be a pancake feed from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. at Cuppa Joe, 111 Fourth St. Tickets are $2.50 at the door.

Next, there is an arts-and-crafts fair today through Sunday at Manhattan Town Center. The fair is entitled "Strawberry Junction" and will feature 67 booths with artisans from six states. Admission is free.

Randy Crow, marketing assistant, said the mall has anticipated the crowds drawn by the Stampede.

"We plan for it. It's one of Manhattan's big events," he said. "It's an alternative for people who don't go to the Stampede. You don't have to be a country music fan to enjoy things native to Kansas," Crow said.

Also in the mall area, the Downtown Marketplace will be having horse-and-buggy rides, sidewalk sales and a farmer's market from 8 a.m. to noon Saturday. There will be entertainment and food, including fresh baked goods. Horse-and-buggy rides are free, but donations toward the Kaw Valley food drive will be accepted, said Scott Morrill, project manager for Manhattan Main Street.

For those interested in outdoor sports, Wildcat Creek Sports Center offers a 9-hole golf course, a driving range, batting cages and sand volleyball courts.

"It's not very busy during the Stampede, so this would be a good time to come out. However, we do recommend setting a tee time for golf during the weekend," Melissa Jacobson, assistant manager, said.

A new six-acre African Forest Trai featuring two chimpanzees, is open at Sunset Zoo.

"Our attendance doesn't really change during the Stampede. A good time to come is in the mornings, because that's when the animals are most active," Angie Fenstermacher, zoo marketing director, said.

People who would rather not tolerate the heat can spend the day in an air-conditioned theater, said Mark Westenmeyer, assistant manager for Seth Child Cinema.

Stampede to increase access to water

CONCERT OFFICIALS DIG WELL TO HELP REDUCE CHANCES OF HEAT-RELATED ILLNESSES.

Jody Johnson
Kansas State Collegian

In a welcome change from years past, this weekend's festivities at Tuttle Creek State Park will have a lot more of something everyone needs: water.

At last year's Stampede, a huge demand for water and limited supplies and equipment caused a water shortage that left many country music fans thirsty. During the three-day event, more than 900 concert-goers were treated for heat-related problems.

The water shortage was a main concern for this year also, Tuttle Creek manager Todd Lovin said.

With a large event like Stampede and with extremely hot temperatures, water availability is always a top priority, he said.

To combat last year's problem, a second well was dug and old equipment was upgraded after Stampede was approved for a grant from the Travel and Tourism division of the Kansas Department of Commerce and Housing.

Pressure tanks, motors and electric-supply systems were replaced to increase water capacity and ensure proper functioning. Larger meters were also installed, and the two wells were connected to create an alternating system.

The alternating system allows one well to be in use while the other is being replenished, and the system should prevent last year's problem of the well being used up too quickly, he said.

With the new water system in place, the park's water capacity is now at nearly 130 gallons per minute, as opposed to last year's 40 gallons per minute, Lovin said.

In addition to the new well system, more underground water lines and faucets have been added to the grounds to make water more available, said Paige Roesler, sales and marketing director for Country Stampede.

Manhattan resident Mandy Wilson said the water shortage at Stampede for the last two years has been a big inconvenience.

"Sometimes you'd be in line for water, and it would run out," she said.

Wilson said she witnessed many people getting sick from dehydration.

"People would just pass out. They weren't getting enough water," she said.

Two years ago, Wilson was pregnant while attending Stampede and said she was worried about drinking enough water.

"I was supposed to drink two quarts of water every hour, but I couldn't get it," she said.

Wilson said she had to go into the Red Cross tent several times to get ice water because the water tanks were empty.

So far, the new water system is working fine, and the park doesn't anticipate any big water-shortage problems this year, Lovin said. However, precautions are still being taken.

"We still have to use the water we have wisely," he said. "We should be able to keep up with it better this year because we have a much better system."

Concert-goers can bring last year's souvenir Country Stampede mug or purchase one this year to fill with water, Roesler said. However, water and other beverages cannot be brought to the event.

NAVAL ACADEMY

Academy allowed star quarterback to graduate despite infraction

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — The U.S. Naval Academy allowed its star quarterback to graduate after he was found guilty of having sex with a freshman woman, while his partner and two others she had sex with were dealt with more harshly, a newspaper reported Wednesday.

Felicia Harris, freshman, said she had sex with senior quarterback Chris McCoy, a violation of the rule forbidding dating between upperclassmen and freshmen, The Baltimore Sun reported.

Harris, 19, of Mitchellville, was expelled pending a review. Sophomore Kevin McGlathery and junior Aaron Smith, two other men she was charged with having sex with, also were recommended for expulsion.

In addition to the recommended expulsion, Smith, 22, of Silver Spring, owes the Navy $67,000, the amount taxpayers spent on his training. Freshmen and sophomores who leave the academy are not required to reimburse the Navy.

McGlathery, 21, of Chicago, quit rather than face expulsion.

The three have asked Navy Secretary John Dalton to review their cases and determine whether McCoy was given preferential treatment. Expulsions require a final approval from Dalton.

"If only I could have scored a few more points, maybe I'd still be there," said Smith, who played varsity basketball.

McCoy, who also could have faced expulsion, instead was placed on probation, revoked of some of his privileges and made to do marching tours as punishment, the newspaper said.

He was allowed to graduate last month and now is on temporary duty at the academy before attending Surface Warfare Officers' School. He's seeking to have his five-year obligation to the Navy cut to two so he can play professional football, the paper said.

McCoy, who set a school record with 43 career touchdowns and led Navy to its first victory over Army in five years, declined to discuss the handing of his case.

"I just hope that everything works out for everybody involved and nobody gets hurt," McCoy said.

Academy spokesman Cmdr. Mike Brady, citing privacy concerns, declined to discuss the cases.

Teen volunteers to sentence first-time juvenile offenders

Jody Johnson
Kansas State Collegian

A new court is in session, and local teens are in charge of the sentencing.

Teen Court, part of the 21st Judicial District, is being introduced into Riley and Clay county schools as a delinquency prevention program.

The program involves bringing first-time juvenile offenders into a courtroom environment consisting of teen volunteers from local schools. Teen volunteers are responsible for deciding the appropriate sentencing for offenders.

Teen roles in the courtroom consist of a bailiff, a court clerk, 12 jurors and an interpreter when necessary.

Teen volunteers must be within the ages of 10 and 17 years or seniors in high school.

Teen Court gives first-time juvenile offenders between the ages of 10 and 17, as well as seniors in high school, the opportunity to go before their peers rather than the judicial court system.

They must have admitted guilt to the police already to be involved in the program, and offenders must not have committed a felony, violent crime or drug-related offense to participate in Teen Court.

The program, if successfully completed by the offender, allows the offender's court record to remain clean.

District Court Judge Meryl Wilson will participate in the Teen Court sessions and is allowing the use of his courtroom.

Wilson said he anticipates the program will be a positive experience both for the teen volunteers and the teen offenders.

"They'll develop a sense of community responsibility," Wilson said. "It will give them the opportunity to think about what are the appropriate consequences for one's actions."

The program is being modeled after a similar Teen Court program in Odessa, Texas, as well as other programs throughout the country. This is the second Teen Court to be implemented in Kansas.

"Research has shown that the Teen Court program puts peer pressure to a positive use," said Brenda Jordan, Teen Court director and assistant Riley County attorney.

Other Teen Court programs have shown that teen offenders who participate in the program are less likely to re-offend because of the teen peer pressure put on them, Jordan said. She said she is hopeful the new program has the same results.

Teen Court coordinator Aimee Falder, the adviser to the teen volunteers, is in charge of appointing teen volunteers to the positions for each court session. She said she thinks Teen Court will be a good learning experience for the teens involved.

AT&T's $32 billion purchase of TCI points to telecommunications future

Associated Press

NEW YORK — AT&T Corp. struck a deal to buy cable TV giant Tele-Communications Inc. for $32 billion Wednesday, gaining the means to bring millions of households all-in-one service — from local calling to high-speed Internet access — through their cable lines.

By bypassing conventional phone wires, AT&T will be able to challenge the Baby Bell regional companies and break into the $110 billion market for local service. The deal also could hasten the day when telephone, television and Internet technology converge in people's living rooms.

AT&T plans to offer such services over the next few years to TCI's 13 million customers and millions more affiliated with the cable company.

A TCI deal is "exactly what AT&T has needed to burst into the local market," said Jeffrey Kagan, a telecommunications consultant in Atlanta. "AT&T would have the ability to offer a bundle they were never able to offer before."

The agreement would combine the nation's No. 1 telecommunications company and one of the biggest cable companies.

It would be the third-richest deal ever in the telecommunications industry, after SBC Communications' planned $60.1 billion purchase of Ameritech and WorldCom's proposed $37 billion takeover of MCI Communications.

AT&T itself has a rocky history with regulators. But Federal Communications Commission chairman William Kennard said this deal could have an easier time.

"If AT&T and TCI make a strong commitment to bring residential consumers more choice in local telephone and high-speed Internet access services, then this proposed merger is eminently thinkable," he said.

AT&T chairman C. Michael Armstrong said the new deal will create competition in local markets instead of reducing it. He said he expects regulators to approve the TCI purchase within nine months.

"We don't anticipate this will be a rough road," Armstrong said.

The companies don't expect any job cuts, because there is little overlap between their businesses.

Liberty Media Group, TCI's programming arm with stakes in some of America's most popular cable networks, including Discovery, Black Entertainment Television and Fox/Liberty Networks, would continue to be operated independently and run by TCI chief executive John C. Malone.

Key to AT&T's vision is TCI's plan to provide up to 10 million advanced TV-set boxes over the next three years for delivering hundreds of TV channels, Internet access and online banking. TCI is spending $1.8 billion to upgrade its equipment for two-way transmission of digital signals by 2000.

With AT&T running things, common telephones eventually could include

Judy Garland reborn on the Internet

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Fans who observed the 29th anniversary of Judy Garland's death on Monday didn't have to travel any farther than their own Internet connection to pay their respects.

On one of numerous Web sites devoted to Garland (www.zianet.com/chrisb), an admirer has posted a color photograph of the singer's crypt in Ferncliff Cemetery in Hartsdale, N.Y., for anyone wishing "to stand in silence in front of Judy's grave."

Celebrity grave sites online are not uncommon. But the number of elaborate, fan-generated Web sites dedicated to Garland so many years after her death is somewhat remarkable. Her Web presence dwarfs that of many contemporary artists, including her daughter, 52-year-old entertainer Liza Minnelli.

"I was really impressed," said Andy Gems, a professional Internet surfer employed by the Web directory Yahoo! "She's a star from a different era, and her sites are of way-higher quality than a lot of the stuff I see for rock bands and current actors and actresses."

A broad search of her name calls up hundreds of pages, but Gems said the 15 core sites linked through a Garland Web ring are notable for their sophisticated design, breadth of information and intricate multimedia links.

Surfers can find out about the 23rd-Annual Judy Garland Festival scheduled for today in her birthplace of Grand Rapids, Minn. Or they can investigate her extensive and varied film career — from the treacly 1930s films with Mickey Rooney and lavish 1940s musicals of Hollywood's Golden Era — "Meet Me in St. Louis," "Easter Parade" — to her critically acclaimed dramatic roles, including an Oscar-nominated performance in 1961's "Judgment at Nuremberg."

Music samplings are clickable from a recording career that spanned four decades and included such standards as "You Made Me Love You," "Get Happy" and "The Man That Got Away."

On several sites, collectors display, trade and sell memorabilia such as photos, movie posters, photographs, autographs and videos of her early 1960s TV variety show.

Information in some of the deeper links can be bizarrely idiosyncratic: from noted typos in her 1922 birth announcement to the fact that she is buried in the same cemetery as Malcolm X.

Discussions on Garland-related bulletin boards can get so intense that her daughter, Lorna Luft, 45, told the Miami Herald last month that some surfers should "get a life."

Still, the Web ring's title page touts a required G-rating for its member sites because they are frequented "by a wide cross section of people, including children."

"My 10-year-old daughter is mad for Judy," said one posting from a 37-year-old Connecticut man.

Mark Harris, manager/Web master of The Judy List, a daily e-mail discussion about Garland launched in 1996, said many of its more than 250 subscribers are younger than 16.

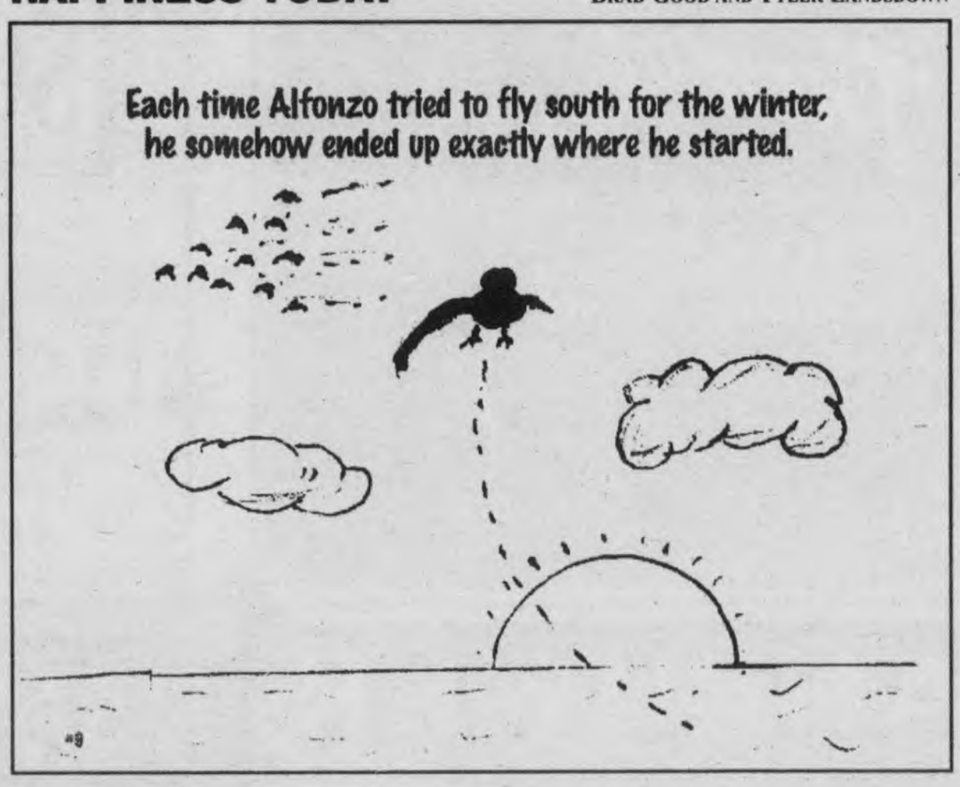
"Judy seems to be a particular favorite with teen-age girls these days, presumably because they identify with her early film work," Harris said, adding that one subscriber is "a prototypical rock 'n' roller in his early 20s," fascinated by her vocal technique.

Camille Paglia, a cultural critic and humanities professor at the University of the Arts in Philadelphia, said the youthful interest in Garland springs as much from a curiosity about American popular music as from annual TV broadcasts of "The Wizard of Oz."

"We're living in an era where style is defined by irony and a sense of detachment," Paglia said. "Artists like Judy Garland offer something young people aren't getting from their rock stars — the pure, organic voice and a sense of emotional intimacy."

Paglia said that in terms of artistic achievement, through film, television, radio, concerts and song styling, Garland is the late Frank Sinatra's only peer, though he lived nearly twice as long.

John Fricke, a Garland biographer who contributes to the Judy Garland Database, is glad that few pages mention the drug-addled antics often associated with her personal life and later concerts.



Fricke views the Web as a means for older fans like himself, who saw Garland perform live, to broaden an appreciation of her artistry among younger fans.

"The Internet leads them to her body of work, instead of the legend that is inaccurately permeated with a sense of tragedy," he said. Garland died at age 47 of a drug overdose.

No one really can say, but young people know where to look for the lady herself: on the Internet, the equivalent of their own backyard.

Actors Bruce Willis, Demi Moore to end 10-year marriage

LOS ANGELES — Bruce Willis and Demi Moore are ending their decade-long marriage, Moore's publicist said Wednesday.

Publicist Pat Kingsley refused to elaborate on whether it was a separation or a divorce. She could not answer questions of custody of the couple's three daughters.

They were married Nov. 21, 1987.

Willis' publicist Paul Bloch said Wednesday the statement was true but because it was released by Kingsley, he had no further detail.

There was no divorce filing in Los Angeles Superior Court on Wednesday.

Willis stars in the summer movie "Armageddon," and has been featured in "Pulp Fiction" and the "Die Hard" films. Moore starred in "Ghost," "Indecent Proposal" and "Striptease."

FBI to join investigation

WICHITA — The FBI will help investigate the death of a man who died after a scuffle with sheriff's deputies in the Sedgwick County Jail, officials said.

The prisoner was in jail while on trial for killing a sheriff's sergeant.

On Tuesday, U.S. Attorney Jackie Williams said he directed the FBI to get involved in the investigation of Sam Penn's death after he received a request from Sedgwick County Attorney Nola Foulston.

The agents will report their findings to Williams, who will decide if charges should be filed against deputies who scuffled with Penn before his death.

"We're going to find out what happened over there, and go from there," Williams said.

Penn, 24, of Wichita, who had been diagnosed as being mildly mentally retarded, was on trial for the April stabbing death of Sgt. Ken Snider.

He was causing a disturbance with his dinner tray at about 6:15 p.m. Sunday in his cell at the jail, Sheriff's Cpt. Gary Steed said.

"He threw his tray down and lunged at one of the deputies and started choking him," Steed said.

A second deputy called for help and then began struggling with Penn in an attempt to restrain him, Steed said.

As the other deputies arrived and handcuffed Penn, he went into "some type of seizures," Steed said. Penn was taken to a hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

Steed said four sheriff's detectives and four agents from the Kansas Bureau of Investigation were also working on the case. Investigators have interviewed 27 inmates and jail staff.

"We welcome it," Steed said of the FBI inquiry.

CABLE IN PRISON

NORRISTOWN, Pa. — A state lawmaker has a captive audience watching to see how he fares with his bill to raise cable rates for some customers. They're in prison.

State prison inmates pay less for cable television than do subscribers on the outside, Rep. John Lawless said. The difference is due to the bulk rates negotiated by prison officials.

A spring survey found prisoners pay an average of $6 to $10.25 monthly for basic service, compared with individual subscribers who pay $11.08 to $25.78, Lawless said Monday.

Military plane carries research equipment to study atmosphere

Associated Press

A red, white and blue DC-3 that used to haul cargo during World War II is carrying a new load these days — research equipment.

The 1942 DC-3, one of the oldest military planes still in the air, is being used for a joint research project between the U.S. Army and the Environmental Protection Agency this week.

Researchers from the University of Kansas also are involved with the project dubbed Operation Safeguard, which will develop sensors to predict the movement of gas clouds and fire plumes traveling through the air.

Ultimately, the EPA would like to use the technology for timely evaluation of chemical leaks or spills and to predict the movement of poisonous gas clouds, research scientist Robert Kroutil said.

The Army wants to use the research to better protect soldiers from chemical agents and other gaseous threats.

During the testing, an infrared camera looks through the belly of the DC-3 as it flies about 2,000 feet above the Farmland Industries fertilizer production plant near Lawrence. Sensors inside the plane measure carbon dioxide emissions from Farmland's smokestacks as well as emissions of ethyl alcohol from a control stack set up for the project.

Because the scientists know how much alcohol is being burned in the test stack, they can measure how well the sensors are working, Kroutil said.

Researchers said they are monitoring equipment rather than checking Farmland's emissions. Farmland is cooperating in the project.

The DC-3 was chosen for the three-day project because it can fly slow — about 100 knots, or about 130 miles per hour. It has also been used extensively in recent years for research.

The plane takes off and lands in Manhattan, where many of the researchers are based. The researchers did similar work last year at Fort Riley.

office manager, said the stores have not seen a significant rise in sales in the past due to the event, but changes in the area might make a difference in the effect on their stores this year.

"Having so many hotels in town might make a big difference, because we might have people stopping in and picking things up before they head out there," she said. "Last year, people in the stores said they were busiest on the day before and on the last day of it."

Williams also said it is difficult to predict the traffic routes following the event.

"It all depends on how the police route the traffic," she said.

In addition to the immediate benefits of having so many people come to the area for the event, the positive ramifications extend to the rest of the year.

"Another benefit we have recognized is the exposure of the Manhattan area, and in particular, Tuttle Creek State Park," Blake said.

"Many of the people who come are camping enthusiasts. Since it's such a nice area, they return once they see what amenities are available."

AT&T stock was down 7 percent, or 4 11/16 a share at 60 11/16, in afternoon trading on the New York Stock Exchange. TCI was up more than 6 percent, or 2 7/16, at 41 1/8 on the Nasdaq Stock Market.

AT&T isn't alone in trying to end busy signals, broken connections and sluggish downloads that have frustrated Internet users, but its deal is by far the biggest attempt.

Sprint Corp. earlier this month unveiled a system that would allow people to talk on the phone and go on the Internet on a single telephone line at the same time.

Another big telephone company, Bell Atlantic, had proposed buying TCI in 1993 for $26 billion. At the time, the deal was ballyhooed as marking the convergence of telecommunications and entertainment, but the deal fell apart and cable and telephones appeared to be headed their separate ways.

to communicate with others, how to get along with people in the jury room. Not everybody has the same opinions," Falder said.

Teen Court decreases the burden placed on juvenile court while still giving juvenile offenders appropriate sentencing and the opportunity to make amends for what they have done, Falder said.

The offender's sentence given by the teen jurors can include community service, a letter of apology to the victim, counseling sessions, essays, restitutions, fines and/or curfews.

"We want to help these people and get them on the right side of the track. Part of doing that is giving them a sentence that's going to make them realize that 'I've done something wrong, and I'm going to make things better,'" Falder said.

Teen participants learn that their actions affect the community and community service work will help them to give back to the community, Falder said.

Teen offenders have 90 days to complete their sentence and receive a clean court record.

"What you will be teaching these individuals with their community service is that they will go to work. They will have to go out in the community and give back to the community something that they have inadvertently taken," Falder said.

Teen volunteer Nicole Peters, Anthony Middle School eighth-grader, said she is excited about starting the program and being involved with helping juvenile offenders.

"If they did something really bad, they should have to make up for it," Peters said.

Anthony Middle School eighth-grader Jamie Cobb said her parents encouraged her to be involved in Teen Court as a way to see how the judicial system works.

Cobb said she is excited about working with others and meeting new people from the different schools involved in the program.

"You're not only going to learn about how to get along with others, but you're going to learn about the court system and how you don't want to be on the other side," Falder said.

Falder said a jury made up of teen peers is much more effective for the offender than a jury of adults and will make a difference on the future actions of the offender.

"It is my hope that the peer pressure will work to keep kids out of trouble," Wilson said.

The first Teen Court night is scheduled for July 14. Falder said she expects to schedule two to three court sessions a month. Three to four cases will be heard in a session.

Girl to receive national award for AIDS volunteerism, service

WICHITA — A 14-year-old girl whose mother and uncle died from AIDS and whose father has the disease will receive her second national award for work in AIDS education this summer.

Jamie Morales, of Wichita, is one of 20 winners of the 1998 Metropolitan Life Foundation/National AIDS Fund Caring Counts Award. It honors 12- to 18-year-olds whose work exemplifies volunteerism and community service in the fight against HIV and AIDS.

Jamie will receive $200 and a plaque during the Caring Counts Conference on July 15-17 in Washington, D.C.

She has been giving presentations about AIDS for six years, and she said she estimates she's spoken to 5,000 people.

Last May, she was one of 10 national winners of the Prudential Spirit of Community award. It is designed to laud young people who take it upon themselves to improve their communities.

Jamie speaks about AIDS to school groups, church groups, health professionals and "whoever calls." She talks about her parents' fight with AIDS and her uncle's and godfather's deaths from AIDS. Jamie is not infected with the AIDS virus.

She started giving AIDS presentations when she was 8. Her legal guardian is an AIDS educator whom Jamie had accompanied to programs.

In her Caring Counts application, she wrote: "I wanted to get involved because I know what it is like. Not being infected but being affected. I did not want anyone to have to go through what I did in order to learn about this disease."

SOMALIA

22 die in Somali floods

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Heavy rain set off floods on Wednesday that killed at least 22 people in Mogadishu and other towns in southeastern Somalia, rescue workers said.

The downpour flooded nearly all the roads in the capital, sweeping away houses. Several of the victims died when their houses collapsed on them, rescue workers said.

Refugees from Somalia's fighting, who live in flimsy, makeshift dwellings, were especially hard-hit. Thousands were forced to flee their homes.

Amish arrested in motorcycle gang drug bust

PHILADELPHIA — Mention the Pagans motorcycle gang and police will talk about lawlessness. Ask about the Amish and there is the standard image of conservative religious values, horse-drawn buggies, maybe the movie "Witness."

If prosecutors are right, the two found common ground in cocaine trafficking. Two Amish men were indicted Tuesday on charges of buying drugs from the motorcycle gang and distributing them at dances in their Lancaster County communities.

"Bikes and buggies, it's a rather strange combination," State Police Maj. Robert Werts said. "Our drug investigations are taking us to places where years ago we didn't think we had a problem."

Abner Stoltzfus, 24, and Abner King Stoltzfus, 23, who are not related, were indicted in federal court on charges of distributing cocaine to members of Amish youth groups. An arraignment was scheduled for July 3.

If convicted, the men face up to life in prison.

John Pyfer, who is representing Abner Stoltzfus, said the Amish are not immune to the pressures of modern society.

"People think the Amish are sheltered from the outside world, but the temptations are there," he said. "My client's parents are extremely conservative — horse and buggy, the whole bit. They're having a hard time understanding this."

Lancaster County is home to some 20,000 Old Order Amish, the most conservative Anabaptist sect. The Amish eschew automobiles, electricity, computers, fancy clothes and most other modern conveniences.

At the time of their indictment, the Amish men were participating in what is known as a "timeout," a period where young Amish men and women between the ages of 16 and 24 are allowed to explore the outside world and decide whether to join the church, their attorneys said.

Both men intended to join, they said.

Eight members of the Pagans motorcycle gang sold the drugs to the Amish men, who then distributed the drugs to members of youth groups known as the Crickets, the Antiques and the Pilgrims at dances between 1993 and 1997, according to the indictment.

WEATHER

Severe thunderstorm causes area damage

Manhattan barely had time to recover from the severe thunderstorm on June 10 before another one struck Manhattan again Monday evening.

A severe thunderstorm traveling east through Manhattan brought about 30 minutes of heavy rain and high winds. There were also periods of dime-sized hail.

The rain and wind knocked down several power lines and trees around Manhattan.

Andrew Beihl, dispatcher for the Riley County Police Department, said numerous trees and power lines were down on the east side of Manhattan.

RCPD authorities said power was out east of Tuttle Creek Boulevard, and street lights and stoplights were out on Juliette Avenue. They also said wind had damaged several street lamps, and power also was out at the RCPD.

At 8:50 p.m., about an hour and a half after the thunderstorm hit Manhattan, residents were still calling the RCPD about storm damage, Beihl said.

At 8:35 p.m. the National Weather Service issued another severe thunderstorm warning for Riley County, but Manhattan was able to escape from another bout of heavy wind and rain.

According to the National Oceanic Atmospheric Association Comprehensive Glossary of Weather Terms for Storm Spotters, a severe thunderstorm warning is issued when it produces tornadoes, hail 0.75 inches in diameter or winds 50 mph or more. A warning means a storm has been reported, and people need to take action to protect life and property.

High school might place officer on-site

Angela Kistner
Kansas State Collegian

Many school districts across the United States have placed armed officers in schools. Soon, Manhattan High School also might have an armed officer on school property.

Wednesday, the Manhattan-Ogden School Board approved a Riley County Police Department application for grant funds that would allow it to place a resource police officer in the high school by a 5-1 vote.

Sylvester Benson, Manhattan High School principal, said Junction City High School uses a resource officer in the classrooms to talk with students about important issues.

He said he wants a resource officer at Manhattan High to be utilized in the same way.

Benson said an officer on campus would be not only a good resource for teachers, but also for students who are on probation or dealing with a court issue. He said they could report to the officer on campus.

Captain Allen Raynor of the RCPD said placing an officer on school property is not a safety issue.

"We've seen a need in this community for many years to become more involved with the youth in this community," he said.

Raynor said a resource officer would be an extension of the Drug Awareness Resistance Education program that teaches elementary- and middle-school-aged children about drug abuse prevention.

The RCPD wants to create better communication and understanding between its officers and the children, Raynor said.

"We want to try and get away from us versus them," he said.

Flordie Pettis, school board member, was the only member who voted against approval to proceed with the program.

She said she was concerned about the gun the officer would carry and that she wanted more information on the program before she would approve it.

RCPD officer Larry George said the gun is part of a police officer's uniform and the officer easily can be identified walking down the hall. It's hard for police officers to see themselves without a gun, George said.

"This is the real world. Police come with guns," he said.

Besides Pettis, some Manhattan residents don't want an armed police officer in the schools.

"I am very strictly opposed to the idea of having a police officer in the high school," Kevin Zollman, former Manhattan High student, said.

Zollman said he didn't believe a resource officer on school grounds would help improve the relationship between the police and the youth.

"The environment that's been created will only be worsened by a presence of a police officer, especially one that has a gun," he said.

"And, legitifying bringing weapons into the school, although it is in the hands of a police officer, you're still legitifying that somebody should be allowed to bring weapons into the school," Zollman said.

Zollman said an armed police officer in the school only brings in the threat of violence.

"It creates an atmosphere of tension," he said.

Dean Zollman, Kevin Zollman's father, said he also didn't think armed police officers belonged in the school.

"I see it as a potential for an accident," he said.

Dean Zollman said he thought an officer might be good for the school, but not one carrying a gun.

"Ask the officers to leave their guns at home," he said.

George said guns shouldn't be an issue because many officers don't even use them.

"Most police officers go through their entire career without ever having to take their gun out of their holster except at the range," he said.

George said a police officer without a gun is just another adult walking down the school hall.

Anderson expansion to affect K-State property, increase safety

Cait Purinton
Kansas State Collegian

The expansion of Anderson Avenue not only will affect the traffic of Manhattan for about nine months, but it will affect what some people might consider a part of K-State's heritage.

Abe Fattaey, associate director of planning and university engineer, said the stone wall in front of Nichols Hall will be removed and restored about 20 feet farther back than its current location. He said that when the wall is rebuilt, it will be a three-walled tier system.

He said the entrance to Old Campus Drive from Anderson Avenue, including the columns, lights and stone work, also will be removed in the construction, but will be restored to its original form farther back.

In addition, Fattaey said the city of Manhattan has agreed to build a stone wall at the intersection of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue in front of the K-State Student Union because K-State donated the land for the right-of-way being installed along the street.

"We're not getting rid of anything, we're just rebuilding," Fattaey said.

The $7 million project will begin in February 1999 and last until October or November 1999, City Engineer Jack D. Messer said.

The project will widen the road so a turning lane and a left-hand turn signal can be added to cut back on accidents at the intersections of Anderson Avenue and 17th Street, Anderson and Denison avenues and Anderson and Sunset avenues.

Messer said these intersections are the three worst intersections in Manhattan. He said Anderson Avenue is the most-often used street in Manhattan. There is no turning lane or designated left turn, so drivers stop to turn, which causes a delay in traffic and frustrates drivers.

When people are in the left lane waiting to turn or stop mid-block to turn into a driveway, frustrated drivers switch to the right lane to avoid having to wait and take risks they shouldn't take, he said.

The city already has purchased property along the targeted construction zone from Karl and Susan Mannschreck at 1855 Anderson Ave. and Devlin Realty Inc. at 1857 Anderson Ave.

Messer said the city plans to purchase two more pieces of property at 630 Fairchild Terrace and 619 Sunset Ave. Several partial acquisitions will be made, in which the city will purchase only the portion of the property affected by the expansion.

The properties on Fairchild Terrace and Sunset Avenue will be torn down and the land will remain open. Part of the project is to landscape in that open space, Messer said.

He said the city will use part of the property at 1855 and 1857 Anderson Ave. time.

The Mannschrecks have lived in their home since they moved to Manhattan in October 1994. In early June, they made the decision to sell their home to the city after being faced with an alternative decision.

Susan Mannschreck said they had the option of selling the house or selling the front lawn, which would make their front porch closer to the street.

"It was a big surprise. It happened, and there was nothing we could do about it," Susan Mannschreck said. "We felt it was better to do this way. We certainly think we were treated fairly by the city."

In fall 1996, the city received Surface Transportation Program Safety funding from the state for the project. Messer said the city submitted a grant application for the high-accident locations to the state, which evaluated how many accidents could be prevented by supplying funding to fix the dangerous intersections.

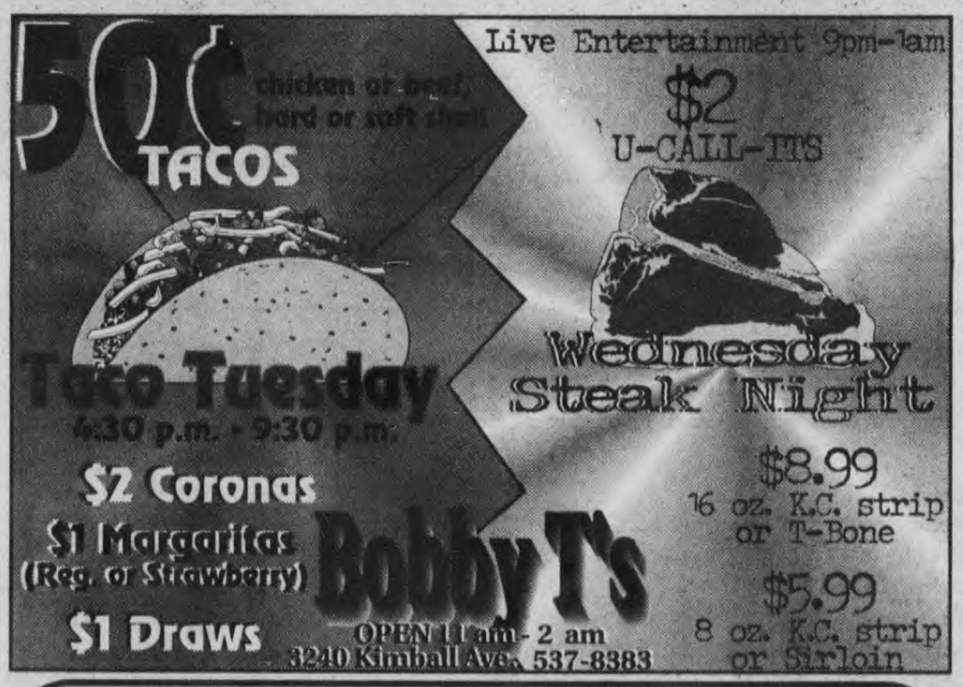
The state does a cost-benefit analysis, and those ranked highest in the state receive the funding. When the city was notified it qualified for the funding, it began to devise a plan to take advantage of the funding, Messer said.

The city also received a $300,000 Economic Development Grant from the Kansas Department of Transportation for the expansion project, said Jerry Petty, director of public works for the city of Manhattan.

Student hospitalized after weekend wreck

Angela Kistner
Kansas State Collegian

A K-State student is hospitalized after being involved in a two-vehicle accident Saturday on Interstate 70.



Monte Cutshall, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, was traveling eastbound on I-70 in his pickup truck when he crossed the center line and hit a Casey's General Store gasoline truck going westbound on I-70, Kansas Highway Patrol trooper Earl Stackhouse said.

The Manhattan Fire Department was called to the accident to help remove Cutshall from his vehicle. The 20-year-old was then transported to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue. From there, he was transported by helicopter to Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka.

Stackhouse said Cutshall was moved from the intensive-care unit Monday, but remains in critical condition.

Gary Edwards, driver of the other vehicle, was not injured. However, the gasoline truck couldn't be removed from the highway for seven hours, Stackhouse said. The accident blocked traffic on I-70 during that time.

Stackhouse said he doesn't know what caused Cutshall to drive into the other lane. Witnesses said Cutshall was pulling a trailer behind his truck and that it was bouncing all over the road. It was also extremely windy. Stackhouse said those reasons could be why Cutshall drove into the other lane.

GM cuts dental coverage for nonstriking workers

COMPANY CUTS COVERAGE TO CONSERVE CASH, NEGOTIATION FOCUS TO BE HEALTH, SAFETY, SUBCONTRACTING, PEGGED RATES

Associated Press

DETROIT — Efforts to end two crippling strikes against General Motors Corp. intensified Monday after the chief negotiators for the automaker and United Auto Workers met for the first time in more than two weeks.

GM labor chief Gerald A. Knechtel and UAW Vice President Richard Shoemaker met for nearly 90 minutes while separate talks by local negotiators continued at each plant.

Company and union officials declined to comment on details of the high-level talks.

The automaker also announced Monday it would continue to provide medical coverage for the nonstriking workers who have been laid off because of the strikes, but that their dental coverage would be suspended until after the dispute ends.

GM had announced last week that it was canceling medical and dental coverage for striking workers.

The company made the cut to conserve cash, but felt the nonstriking workers should not be punished for circumstances beyond their control, spokesman Gerry Holmes said.

GM spends about $4.3 billion a year on health and dental coverage for its U.S. hourly and salaried employees.

At the Delphi Flint East parts plant, the president of UAW Local 651, Danny Thetford, said the meeting between Knechtel and Shoemaker was an encouraging sign and might have led to more serious discussions in his local plant negotiations.

"It's a little bit too soon to see any results of that meeting yet," Thetford said. "I am a little optimistic, however, in that we did have a lot of serious conversation about our issues today. There was a lot more dialogue than normal. That's always encouraging."

Negotiations were to resume today.

The strikes by nearly 9,200 workers at the Flint, Mich., plants also have idled more than 162,700 hourly workers at 26 assembly plants and more than 100 parts plants in the United States, Mexico and Canada.

At the Flint Metal Center, a stamping plant, Local 659 President Duane Zuckschwerdt said there was no progress. He said negotiations focused on health and safety issues, subcontracting and so-called "pegged rates."

Pegged rates allow workers to quit work after reaching a set production quota, even if time is left on their eight-hour shifts. GM has demanded that the union eliminate pegged rates in the one area of that plant where they remain.

The meeting of Shoemaker and Knechtel could be a sign that both sides are looking for a face-saving way of settling the conflict, which has idled most of GM's North American production at a second-quarter cost estimated at $1 billion after taxes.

The strikes began June 5 at the Flint Metal Center and June 11 at the Delphi Flint East parts plant. They are the longest strikes at the automaker since a 67-day walkout in 1970.

Country music brings thousands to Tuttle story by Kelly Dickson and Jody Johnson • graphic by Bryan Sullivan

Thousands of country music fans went to Tuttle Creek State Park over the weekend to the Country Stampede country music festival. Medical personnel, Stampede organizers and local businesses said they credit good planning and experience for this year's success.

"We worked with the security over there, and we felt it was the best year as far as organization for the event," Anthony Metcalf, sheriff for Pottawatomie County, said. "We had a lot of officers comment on how friendly the people were this year. We're looking forward to next year on the law enforcement side."

There were no big problems with the campers this year, said Rick Boatman, grounds and maintenance manager for Stampede.

"This is the third year now, they're learning how to get along and not to disturb the peace," Boatman said.

Boatman said he does not foresee the need for any changes in plans for next year's Stampede.

"We had a good show this year. Everything went fine, and everything was smooth," he said. "Our major problem is getting it cleaned up to turn it back over to the State Park, because this is their big Fourth of July weekend."

Boatman said there weren't any significant problems with parking, injury or illnesses. Heat and foolish behavior were the main problems.

Metcalf said every arrest that was made involved alcohol.

Larry Couchman, coordinator of EMS and first aid for Stampede, said heat was a significant player in the cause of many of the problems throughout the weekend.

"I am very pleased with the way things went. Of all three years, this was the smoothest-running year," Couchman said.

There were three first-aid tents at the festival to help festival attendees in need of medical attention.

A busy weekend had been projected for the medical tents because the heat was going to be so bad, Couchman said. There were three things he said he felt contributed to the overall success of the weekend.

First, the medical staff worked with the management of Country Stampede to allow people to bring in spray bottles with water and hand-held fans on Saturday and Sunday, Couchman said.

Second, on Saturday and Sunday the Blue Township Fire Department brought in a hose to spray water from the lake for people to run through, walk through or just play in.

"Third, on Sunday, God blessed us with cloud cover, and we didn't have to deal with direct sun," Couchman said.

Stampede ticket holders brought more than their love of country music into Manhattan over the weekend; they also brought in business.

Rickel-McMillin Retail Liquor on Tuttle Creek Boulevard tripled its business through the concert weekend, Teresa Rickel-McMillin, store owner, said.

"It's a great economic impact on our business," Rickel-McMillin said. "We have already sat down and started planning for next year.

"We plan all year for this weekend. It is our busiest weekend of the year."

Jennifer Heeren, junior in elementary education, said she attended the Stampede with her roommates and some friends.

"This was the first time I had been. It was great, and we had a good time," Heeren said.

"The heat really didn't affect us at all, we just constantly sprayed ourselves with water from bottles," she said.

MONEY ARRESTED

Rock singer Eddie Money arrested on suspicion of battery

LOS ANGELES — Rock singer Eddie Money, who hit the Top 10 in the 1980s with "Take Me Home Tonight," was arrested after allegedly fighting outside an apartment.

Money was arrested on suspicion of battery, Sgt. Kenneth Henkle said.

"He was taken into custody pending an investigation, but he's been very cooperative with us," Henkle said.

The 49-year-old Money got into a fight at about 9:15 p.m. Sunday, Sgt. Christopher Vasquez said. He was released early today.

"Apparently he struck some individual," Vasquez said. "I don't know the particulars, what he was fighting over or anything else." He didn't know if the other person was a man or a woman.

Money, a former New York City police officer who has a wife and five children, also scored in the Top 40 with "Walk on Water," "Two Tickets to Paradise," "Baby Hold On" and "Maybe I'm a Fool."

Strike causes losses in 2nd quarter for GM

DETROIT — With settlement talks showing no signs of progress, General Motors Corp. said Tuesday that the cost of two strikes at key parts plants totaled $1.18 billion in the second quarter.

In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, GM said its second-quarter earnings would be reduced by $1.79 a share after taxes because of a strike-caused production loss of 227,000 cars and trucks.

This month's walkouts at two parts plants in Flint, Mich., have largely shut down GM's North American production. The walkouts by nearly 9,200 workers have idled more than 162,700 other GM hourly workers at 26 assembly plants and more than 100 parts plants in the United States, Mexico and Canada.

There weren't any indications of a breakthrough as negotiations continued.

However, there was encouraging news at the Delphi Flint East parts plant. President Danny Thetford of Local 651 said there was a more productive mood around the bargaining table.

"We flushed out a lot more detail ... We believe there's been a little progress," Thetford said.

Norm McComb, first vice president of UAW Local 659 in Flint, said there "wasn't much movement" in talks at the Flint Metal Center, a stamping plant.

GM Vice President Donald C. Hackworth told employees in a recorded message that he was pessimistic about prospects for a settlement.

"The status is still the same," Hackworth said. "No progress has been made toward resolving this crisis that is crippling GM."

Local storms cause damage

Brian R. Crisp
Kansas State Collegian

Monday evening's storm struck a blow against many KPL Gas Service customers' electricity and at least one man's truck.

The National Weather Service reported gusts of up to 60 mph in Manhattan at 7:05 p.m., as well as 4-inch hail seven miles southeast of Randolph.

Also, there was a brief tornado reported at 7:10 p.m. three miles north of St. Marys off Kansas Highway 63.

Stacy Kohlmeier, KPL operations manager, said the storm left more than 6,800 customers without power. Most of the power was restored by 3:00 a.m., but hundreds of others had to wait longer.

Kohlmeier said the wait was due to the excessive load on repair crews and the ground conditions. Muddy fields made it difficult to reach some fallen poles. Crews had to use a tractor to reach those that couldn't be reached by trucks.

Repair crews have been sleeping very little or not at all recently, Kohlmeier said.

More than 100 poles have been knocked down in the last month due to storms.

"The tough part is we've had back-to-back storms. It's been a difficult time. The crews are tired," Kohlmeier said.

Four of the poles were knocked down when part of a building's roof blew off and hit the substation at Second and Leavenworth streets.

Among the damages are 10 fallen poles, multiple snapped power lines and one crushed '84 Dodge pickup, owned by William D. Hancock.

Hancock said that his truck's cab on the driver's side was crushed by a limb that fell off a cottonwood tree. The truck was parked on the side of the street at 601 Gross St.

"I have called the city several times to have the tree fixed, because it was hanging over the road, but they never did," Hancock said.

Hancock said the truck is totaled, and his insurance only covers liability.

The Manhattan Fire Department answered 14 storm-related calls, Jerry Snyder, battalion chief, said. Snyder said the number and nature of the calls were routine for a storm of this size.

"Anytime we get a storm with high winds, we get a lot of calls," Snyder said.

Most of the calls involved arching power lines caused by fallen tree limbs. Snyder said that none of the incidents were serious.

"When a power line is down, we just stand by and make sure people stay out of the area until KPL arrives," Snyder said.

Alice Roepke, community relations director for Mercy Health Center, said there were no emergency room patients or injuries reported.

National Guard deployed to help with power outages

Associated Press

National Guard troops went to Fort Scott in southeastern Kansas on Tuesday to help residents and a hospital cope with a massive power outage and water shortage caused by powerful thunderstorms.

The storms were part of a severe weather system that pounded much of eastern Kansas on Monday night, causing structural damage and knocking down trees and power lines but causing no life-threatening injuries.

Kansas National Guard troops were bringing a generator to Fort Scott's water plant and stoves to St. Mercy Hospital, guard spokeswoman Joy Moser said.

Power was out in all of Fort Scott, as well as several small surrounding towns, including Hyattville, Bronson and Uniontown, but there was no immediate estimate of the number of customers affected. A spokesman for KG&E, the utility company that serves the area, said power might not be restored until today.

Tornado watches and warnings were issued Monday evening for several counties in the central, east-central, south-central and southeast parts of the state, but no tornadoes had been confirmed by late Monday night.

At the Perry Lake marina in Jefferson County, docks were torn loose, most boats were overturned or turned loose from docks and two insignificant injuries were reported.

"The wind has twisted all the docks and blown them all, shifted them all," Undersheriff Jeff Herrig said Tuesday morning. Some boats were damaged. Herrig said he still was assessing damage at the marina Tuesday.

Campers near the outlet on the lake's dam sustained cuts, but were able to call for help, Herrig said.

The National Weather Service service reported three-quarter-inch hail and winds near 65 mph near Lyndon in Osage County. Sixty-mph winds and three-quarter-inch hail were reported at Williamsburg in Franklin County, the weather service said.

U.S. jet fires on Iraqi missile site

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — An American F-16 fired Tuesday on an Iraqi missile site that had threatened British warplanes, a jolt to U.S.-Iraq relations after several months of relative calm.

"The message is very simple: Our forces are going to protect themselves. This is an act of self-defense," said Defense Secretary William Cohen, describing the event to reporters at a Pentagon briefing.

Cohen said he hoped the incident was an isolated one and did not presage a renewal of tensions. But he said, "If our aircraft, or those of our allies are threatened, it will be met with a very vigorous response."

In Baghdad, an Iraqi official called the incident "proof of the aggressiveness of Americans."

"This is an unjustified, aggressive act. No radar was opened," an official at the Ministry of Culture and Information said on customary condition of anonymity.

It was the first time U.S. jets fired on an Iraqi radar site since November 1996.

The aircraft were participating in Operation Southern Watch, the mission established after the 1991 Persian Gulf War aimed at denying Iraq use of large portions of its air space.

The U.S. Air Force F-16CJ fighter was one of four protecting four British Tornadoes flying a monitoring mission over Iraq's southern no-fly zone. Two U.S. Navy EA-6B electronic warfare planes also were nearby, officials said.

An Iraqi radar located near the southern city of Al-Basra illuminated the British jets, a move that is seen as an intention to fire, Pentagon spokesman Col. Richard Bridges said. One F-16 shot at the radar site with a HARM missile. No fire was returned, and all the aircraft returned safely to their bases.

It was not clear whether the Iraqi missile site had been hit, Cohen said. British officials said they believe it was destroyed.

Cohen also said he would make no move now to bolster the 20,200 U.S. forces in the region. The Iraqis have not made any other aggressive military moves that would call for such a change, he said.

Vice President Al Gore, speaking to reporters at the White House, said there should be no rush to assume the incident was a deliberate provocation.

"We do know from the history of patrolling the no-fly zones that there are a lot of incidents like this from time to time and there are other possible explanations," he said.

"But just so the message is clear, we

Linda Tripp testifies before Lewinsky grand jury

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Linda Tripp, whose tape-and-tell friendship with Monica Lewinsky spurred a White House crisis, spent six hours Tuesday explaining to a grand jury why she secretly recorded the young intern and brought to light allegations of a presidential affair and coverup.

"I find it very easy to truthfully answer the questions posed to me by the prosecutors and the grand jury," Tripp told her lawyer as she left the grand jury room.

She is to return Thursday for additional testimony, Anthony Zaccagninim, one of her lawyers, said.

Prosecutor Kenneth Starr summoned Tripp, the only cooperating witness among the three key players in the probe, as his investigators sought to crystallize for grand jurors evidence of obstruction of justice often overshadowed by the lurid sexual nature of the case.

Prosecutors also sent a message to Lewinsky, away in California for a family visit, and the president, on an official trip to China: The investigation is pressing forward with or without their cooperation.

After six months of virtual silence, Tripp relished the long-awaited opportunity to try to convince grand jurors she hadn't manipulated an unwitting woman half her age for monetary gain or to embarrass a president.

Rather, she came forward simply because she was witness to possible White House crimes, she insisted. "I did not cultivate Monica — she cultivated me," Tripp said in an interview published in The Washington Post the morning of her testimony.

A public relations specialist at the Pentagon, Tripp also sent a message Tuesday to her supporters through the Internet: "I remain committed to the truth despite all efforts to obscure the facts."

The president was in China, far-removed from developments Tuesday that also included a court decision threatening to rejuvenate leftover lurid details from the now-dismissed Paula Jones sexual harassment suit.

In Little Rock, Ark., U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright ordered most of the court filings in Jones lawsuit unsealed, lifting a gag order she had imposed last fall.

Wright kept her order from taking effect for 10 days to give the case's principals time to appeal. She said a transcript of Clinton's sworn deposition would be among the documents made public.

It was the Jones case that produced the disclosure of Tripp's tapings — as well as the allegations that Lewinsky had engaged in a sexual affair with the president and was later encouraged to lie about it in exchange

Dairy Bar serves community as educational tool for students

Cait Purinton
Kansas State Collegian

People who want a cool treat on a hot summer day can go to the Dairy Bar in Call Hall and buy ice cream for the same price as before the nationwide butterfat shortage.

The increased price of butterfat, a substance used in dairy processing, has not changed the product prices at the Dairy Bar in Call 144, but the prices might be raised in the future.

Sri Adapa, K-State dairy processing plant manager, said the market prices are fluctuating and that he is not sure how long the prices will remain high.

He said he hasn't made any decisions yet regarding prices on the products in the Dairy Bar, but if the prices remain high for a few months, he will change the prices. If they are only temporarily high, he will not change the rates.

Call Hall has a dairy processing plant in room 155 where milk, ice cream, cheese and butter are all produced and licensed by K-State.

Adapa said the most popular attraction at Call Hall is the Dairy Bar ice cream, and the most popular flavor, aside from the basic vanilla, is Swiss Chocolate Almond.

"Our ice cream is one of the most popular at this time," he said.

Customers can choose from the 16 different flavors available at the Dairy Bar, which is open from 9:30 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. Monday through Friday, Manager Renee Westgate said.

In addition to ice cream, there are other dairy products available, such as butter, cheese and milk.

Adapa said the campus dining centers buy K-State's milk for the dining facilities, and the K-State Student Union sells ice cream from the processing plant.

Adapa said the Dairy Bar does not make a lot of profit, but what little profit it does make goes back into the dairy processing department and is used for teaching, research, maintenance and upgrading the facility.

The processing plant employs full-time civil service workers who process the dairy products, but graduate and undergraduate students conduct research projects in the plant. Adapa said their research might consist of anything related to dairy processing, including making a new product or improvements in dairy processing.

"It serves as an excellent opportunity for students who are in classes related to dairy processing," Adapa said.

Rebecca Nelson, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said she comes from an agricultural background and likes her job at the Dairy Bar. However it is something she does not want for a career.

In the two years she has worked at the Dairy Bar, Nelson has also had the opportunity to help with the ice cream processing.

TAKING THE HEAT

Friend risks flames to save fuel truck driver

STOCK ISLAND, Fla. — The fire was so hot it melted the side of three fuel tankers and left aluminum puddles on the ground, but that didn't stop Robbie Reckwerdt.

Jolted awake Monday morning by the sound of a tanker truck exploding, Reckwerdt was warned by neighbors outside to stay away from the scene. But then he saw his friend, John Pliss, amid the flames. Pliss had been transferring fuel from one truck to another when the tanks exploded.

"He said, 'Help me ... help me, I'm burnt!'" Reckwerdt said. "I said 'Johnny, hold still. Roll towards me if you can.'" Finally, Reckwerdt drove his golf cart into the flames and saved his friend.

Pliss, 36, suffered first- and second-degree burns and was in critical condition Tuesday. No other injuries were reported.

"He was in such agony ... His beard was still burning as I picked him up — singeing. That's how hot it was," Reckwerdt said.

The county fire marshal was investigating what caused the first tanker to explode. The flames consumed the two trucks as well as a third tanker parked in the same lot that also was carrying diesel, Sheriff's Deputy Greg Artman said.

All three trucks were owned by the Dion Oil Co., an independent supplier of fuel for the Florida Keys.

Woman claims she was wrongly fired for wearing dress

GALLATIN, Tenn. — A Pentecostal woman who says wearing pants is against her religion is suing to get her job back at an automotive plant where she says she was fired for wearing a dress to work.

Charlene McCormick said her firing violated the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964. She also wants back pay and unspecified damages.

"We believe you have to dress holy and look holy and walk daily with God. We believe (wearing pants is) a sin, and the Bible says it's an abomination," said McCormick, a member of the Pentecostal Holiness denomination.

According to her lawsuit filed last week in federal court in Nashville, McCormick was working for TAD Staffing Services employment agency in April 1996 when she was sent to work as a machine operator at the Robert Bosch Corp. plant in Hendersonville.

A few days into the assignment, her supervisor sent her home, saying her dress was a safety hazard that might get caught in the machinery.

McCormick was assigned to another task in a different department of the plant, but the personnel director saw her wearing a dress and instructed the temporary agency to fire her, the lawsuit said.

Representatives of TAD Staffing Services' Gallatin office could not be reached for comment.

WITCH DOCTOR

Man-eating crocodile killed with help of witch doctor

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — Using a lethal combination of magic and skill, a village witch-doctor in eastern Malaysia helped kill a crocodile that fatally attacked a fisherman, a newspaper reported Tuesday.

Nyalih ak Nengalie, medicine man in the village of Sri Aman, put a spell on the dead fisherman's dog and then set the animal out as bait, the Star Daily said.

The reptile was captured by villagers when it came to eat the dog. They then quickly hacked the crocodile into several pieces to be cooked and served at a feast in the village, located in remote Sarawak state on the island of Borneo.

Villagers sought help from the magician after they failed to kill the crocodile with bullets.

Institute to study ways to prevent school violence

CRIME INSTITUTE WANTS DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION TO CREATE STATEWIDE PLAN.

Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Koch Crime Institute wants to help the Kansas Department of Education develop a statewide plan to deal with violence in schools.

"This issue is particularly important because of the fact that we mandate our kids to attend school," Jerry Wells, the institute's interim director, said Tuesday.

"If we require them to attend school, what does it say about our society when we aren't able to protect them while they are fulfilling that mandate?" he added.

In a separate interview, Sharon Freden, assistant education commissioner, said most of Kansas' 304 school districts have contingency plans for dealing with crisis situations such as shootings.

She said educators feel it's better for school districts to have their own plans in place, rather than a statewide mandate.

"The situations vary so much from district to district," she said. "What is acceptable behavior in one school district may result in a suspension in another."

Freden said state law prohibits students from bringing weapons to school and those caught face a range of punishment, including expulsion.

Wells said the institute's research showed there have been six school shootings in the past six months in the United States, but none occurred in Kansas.

He said the only school shooting in Kansas he could recall in which students were killed was in Olathe during the 1995-96 school year, when two students died in a drive-by shooting.

Wells said the institute will study various ways to reduce school violence and will sponsor a conference on Dec. 2 and 3 on the topic. He said there was no timetable for completing the study, but hoped to have some of it ready in time for the Kansas Legislature to consider next year.

The institute's announcement came a week after Gov. Bill Graves proposed a plan for reducing violence and illegal drugs in schools.

"We're in support of the governor's intent," Wells said. "It may be a viable solution, but we won't know until we have done our research."

The governor said he wants to punish violent students by suspending their driver's licenses.

For those who haven't reached driving age, the suspension could take effect when they reach that age.

Graves also wants to make it a felony, rather than a misdemeanor, to bring guns or drugs to school.

Suspending driver's licenses would apply to those with weapons or drugs at school, or those who make threats, commit violence at school or school events, or break truancy laws.

The governor's plan, which needs legislative approval, also would create a new category of funding to allow schools to offer hazardous-duty pay to teachers who work with violent students who have been suspended or expelled.

The institute, founded by businessman Bill Koch, is privately funded and has no official ties to the state.

Post Office to increase price of stamps by 1 cent

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — An increase in postal rates has been postponed until January, the Postal Service's governing board announced Tuesday.

"The delayed implementation is good news," said board chairman Sam Winters, announcing that new rates — including a one-cent boost to 33 cents for First Class mail — will take effect Jan. 10, 1999.

"This penny increase is the right amount at the right time, and it will allow the employees of the Postal Service to continue the momentum of four years of record service and record financial performance," Winters said.

When the post office began the long and complex process of raising rates a year ago, it anticipated putting higher prices into effect this summer, as rising costs forced the agency into the red.

However, the post office posted its third straight year of profits of $1 billion or more.

That resulted in the Postal Rate Commission, which approved the new rates May 11, cutting back some of the requested increases and urging that higher prices be delayed until next year. Congress also passed a resolution opposing an increase.

The decision to delay the new rates until Jan. 10, Winters said, "was done after careful consideration of customer and congressional input, management financial forecasts and what we believe to be in the best interests of our customers and the Postal Service."

"If we would have changed rates in June we would have collected an additional $800 million between June and January," said Rich Porras, a Postal Service vice president.

The decision was lauded by both Postal Rate Commission Chairman Edward Gleiman and Robert E. McLean, executive director of the Mailers Council, which represents the majority of business and association mailers.

The current rates took effect Jan. 1, 1995.

Care should be taken as severe weather approaches

Living in Kansas in the summer can be dangerous for both residents and property. Thunderstorm and tornado watches and warnings seem to be a typical part of TV viewing.

But if people pay attention to the warnings and follow the meteorologist's safety precautions, injuries and damages might be lessened.

Some of the safety precautions given might seem like things everyone knows. Many people take the precautions for granted because they're used to living in Kansas during storm season. This can be deadly.

Don't go outside to look at the storm. When people hear a warning on television, they often want to go look outside and see what's happening. Stay inside, because a storm can approach rapidly and catch people off guard

If caught outside during a storm, go to the nearest shelter or ditch and stay there until the storm is finished. Underpasses on highways are also safe places to take cover.

Stay away from windows. High winds or hail can break the windows and seriously injure someone.

Go to a ground floor or an interior part of the house or apartment. This will place you out of the danger of flying glass and debris.

Keep emergency flashlights and candles around in case the electricity goes out.

Also, keep food that doesn't need to be cooked or refrigerated, because power could be off for an indefinite amount of time.

After the storm, be patient with the police and fire department. They are receiving a lot of calls about storm damage and can't handle every call at the same time. Also, don't tie up emergency lines with insignificant damage reports that can wait.

If loss of electricity has affected stoplights and they aren't working, treat them as four-way stops. This will help keep the number of traffic injuries down.

Storms in Kansas aren't always life-threatening, but everyone needs to take them seriously.

Girl power?

Being a woman in the 1990s isn't as easy as magazines attempt to portray

MY VIEW

Brandi Hertig

There's nothing like being made to feel like a lumbering, inadequate sloth by magazine covers at the grocery store. It really adds the human touch to otherwise inanimate objects.

I mean, if those women actually were sitting there in the check-out lane next to the Tic-Tacs, leering at me with their violet eyes, the feelings of inadequacy would be just the same.

I should know better. I do know better. But rational thinking doesn't kick in when you realize the gold standard in womanhood is something off-limits to you.

It's part genetics, part availability of monetary funds, and it's all bad news.

I think it's a desire of all women to be regarded as beautiful, although even that has its own personal baggage.

And we don't want any of that "You're beautiful in your own way" line of crap. We want the "Oh, we need to put your half-naked body on the cover of some magazine, stat!" line of crap.

When it came down to this, I just don't know. It seems as though we've seen the rise and fall of feminism all within the span of about 30 years.

When the slogan of women the world over is "Girl Power" and is shouted by nymphs who have names that could very well be the names of deodorants, the battle to gain any respect for our sex has ended.

So, what else is there left to do except lie back and wistfully wish our asses looked like the woman's on page 67 of the July issue of Cosmopolitan?

Growing up, magazines targeted at my age group made me notice every imperfection ever on my body.

They all let me know how to fix them, with articles about how to tighten my thighs and how to apply makeup to make myself look like someone else.

And, of course, I understood early on that the ultimate goal of all of this was to get boys to notice me. So I stopped reading them.

Growing older sadly provided no respite from these magazines. To account for the slight shift in demographics, magazines simply add more articles about sex, about how to be cattier at work and how to please him in bed.

The way women look seems to override anything else we do. I was watching a marathon the other day on ESPN. The commentators analyzed the men's competitive tactics as they watched them run.

As they watched the women run, one commentator said the leader would "look really good" on the motorcycle that was up as a prize for the winner.

Nice. Real nice.

I guess I'd rather be astute and average than gorgeous and painfully stupid.

But then again, I don't see anyone clawing my head open to get a good gander at my brain.

This all goes beyond any standard of sensible reasoning, of course. I know I would be insulted if the only accolades I ever received was on the basis of my looks — something I never earned anyway.

It's not like anyone ever poked around with their own double helices to create the model of picturesque. But that doesn't matter.

Women can know what they want. They can be strong and comfortable with themselves.

Then, in one swoop, the idea of what they should be can crush all of that.

We are our own worst enemies.

Student senator says columnist was wrong about Reagan's term

Editor,

This reader is interested in knowing where the editor of this newspaper got the audacity to allow columnist Eric Goold to refer to one of this nation's great leaders as a dictator.

I am referring to Goold's reference to President Reagan in his column containing mindless drivel about his personal TV-viewing habits.

Not considering the columnist's presumptuousness regarding the reader's interest in his TV-viewing habits, he still is behaving irresponsibly.

If the columnist would take the time to verify a few facts, he would realize Reagan was truly a great leader — and far from a dictator.

I would invite the columnist to spend a couple of weeks living in Cuba, Iraq or China and see if he wishes to revise his opinion of Reagan.

Reagan restored confidence in this nation after a long and difficult period of mistrust in government. The nation also has enjoyed the longest period of peacetime prosperity due to the implementation of Reagan's policies.

Unlike many modern leaders, Reagan truly made a difference. His ability to communicate greatly only added to his numerous achievements.

To slander this great leader's character is immoral and un-American. However, it is fashionable for college students to disregard common sense and responsibility in favor of liberal causes and left-wing propaganda.

Unfortunately, one would not expect this college-run newspaper to see things any differently.

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT

Prosecutors to push for new exam

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — Months of appeals have delayed a competency exam for a man who was deemed too brain-damaged for trial in the 1987 shooting death of his estranged girlfriend but then earned high marks in college.

Prosecutor John Smriga said he will ask a Superior Court judge to order a test immediately for Kenneth Curtis.

Curtis, 32, is accused of shooting Donna Kalson, 21, in the head outside a Stratford restaurant on Oct. 30, 1987. After killing her and wounding her date, Curtis shot himself in the head, police said.

Curtis, who suffered brain damage and partial paralysis, was declared incompetent to stand trial after psychiatrists who examined him said he would be unable to communicate with his lawyers.

In 1989, after a fourth and final competency hearing, a judge ordered him discharged from custody. As part of that ruling, he was supposed to undergo annual psychiatric evaluations, but the state Appellate Court overturned that order in 1990, allowing Curtis to go free without any psychiatric monitoring.

Curtis was arrested in November after Stratford police confirmed a report by WTNH-TV that he was enrolled in the pre-med psychiatry program at Southern Connecticut State University and had earned a grade point average of 3.3 at several colleges over the past five years.

VETERAN SPIRIT

WWI veteran to marshal parade

MOUNT JULIET, Tenn. — Even at 109, John Painter shows the fire that led him to once enlist in the Army — for World War I.

"He gets around quite well," said his daughter, Doris Potts. "He's on doctor's orders to use a walker, and he usually winds up carrying that around the house!"

Painter, the oldest of Tennessee's 27 surviving World War I veterans, has been asked to be one of the grand marshals in a parade this November marking the 80th anniversary of the Armistice, which ended World War I in 1918.

State Veterans Affairs officials believe there's only one older U.S. veteran, who's now living in Puerto Rico.

Program teaches good health, fitness activities

Jody Johnson
Kansas State Collegian

Jumping into one of the city's swimming pools isn't the only option for Manhattan children looking for activity and the chance to make new friends.

The Wellness Program, available to first- through sixth-grade Manhattan students of public and parochial grade schools, includes fitness activities such as bowling, hiking, sports and swimming. The four-week long program focuses on involving kids in fun physical activities during the summer while teaching them about good health, nutrition and the importance of staying physically fit.

"We want the kids to be out and active," Cindy Norris, third-grade teacher at Lee School, said.

The Wellness Program is supervised by six teachers from the USD 383 grade schools. This year 120 students are in the program.

Norris said bowling is a fun activity for the kids in the program.

"This is giving these kids the opportunity to enjoy something they don't get the chance to do very often," she said.

Lisa Stramel, sixth-grade teacher at Marlatt School, said she thinks the program is a good opportunity for kids, who enjoy the activities.

The program allows kids to meet students from other schools while learning about the benefits of exercise. Students also learn cooperation skills and the importance of team work, Norris and Stramel said.

Students in the Wellness Program meet every weekday morning at Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School and participate in fitness activities for three hours each day.

"Our whole goal is to keep them active," said Jeanne Ross, Bluemont School second-grade teacher.

Third-grader Wynter Burns said the Wellness Program gives her something fun to do during the summer when many of her friends are gone.

"We do fun stuff, like go hiking," third-grader Jordan Wenger said.

The teachers act mostly as monitors of the students, Ross said. She said they enforce the rules and make sure kids are behaving.

"The kids have done a good job following the rules for the most part," she said.

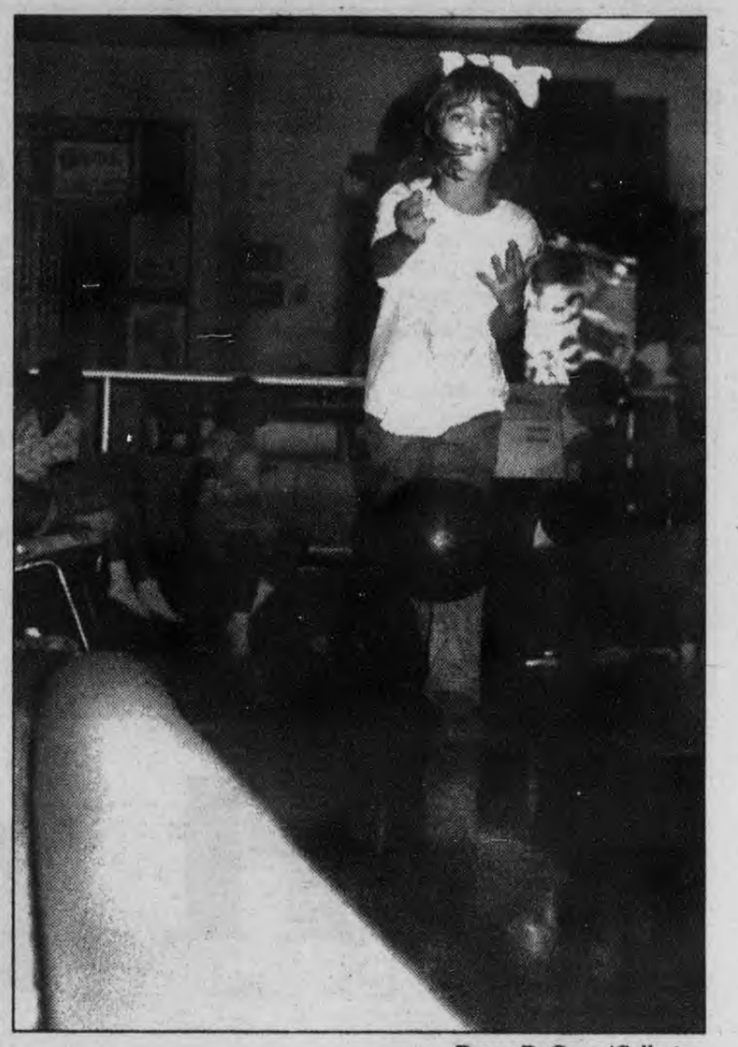
Students in the program have participated in a five-mile hike at Linear Park, a Sunset Zoo outing, track-and-field days and station days where students rotate between several sport activities.

"We're trying to introduce kids to things they may not have done before," Ross said.

The students go on walks almost every day on a track or in parks. During the walks, teachers talk about fitness, nutrition and good health, Stramel said.

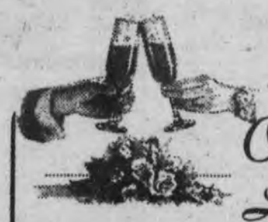
Instead of lecturing about the importance of physical fitness, teachers use demonstration-teaching by involving kids in activities that are good for their health, Stramel said.

"All the kids have enjoyed the program," Stramel said.



The Wellness Program is one of many summer programs available to Manhattan grade-school students. Other programs include basic computer skills, fine arts, math and science, imagination and basic skills workshops.

The Wellness Program is the largest and most popular program available, Ross said



"Once kids find out what we did this year, there will be a big draw again next year," Ross said.

Paul Goeppner, owner of Memory Lanes, let the kids bowl for free.

"It's always good to see kids enjoy themselves and have fun," he said. "It's nice to give things back to the community."

Art show displays nudes, tries to shut down NEA

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Stephanie Smith stopped at the sidewalk art show on Tuesday and scrunched her face in horror when she saw the pictures on aluminum easels in front of the National Endowment for the Arts.

"This is absolutely awful," Smith, 31, said. "I don't think they should be putting this out here on the street — not with all the tourists and the children. I don't think it does any good. It's kind of in-your-face."

Martin Mawyer of the Christian Action Network wanted the public to see "indecent artwork" he said is supported by the NEA so he can protect them from it.

So the network's 44-year-old president and founder put on his sidewalk art show Tuesday, featuring works showing a nude woman seemingly preparing to castrate a man, a Robert Mapplethorpe nude self-portrait with a bullwhip and a portrait of a woman shaving her pubic hair.

"I don't know what this is, but it ain't art," groused a film producer who would identify himself only as Bill. Nearby, a group of Girl Scouts wearing green merit badge sashes climbed onto tourist buses, but network officials shooed children away from the exhibit.

The Republican attempt to shut down the NEA because of such artwork is flagging this year, and Mawyer said his art show was an attempt to kick-start things.

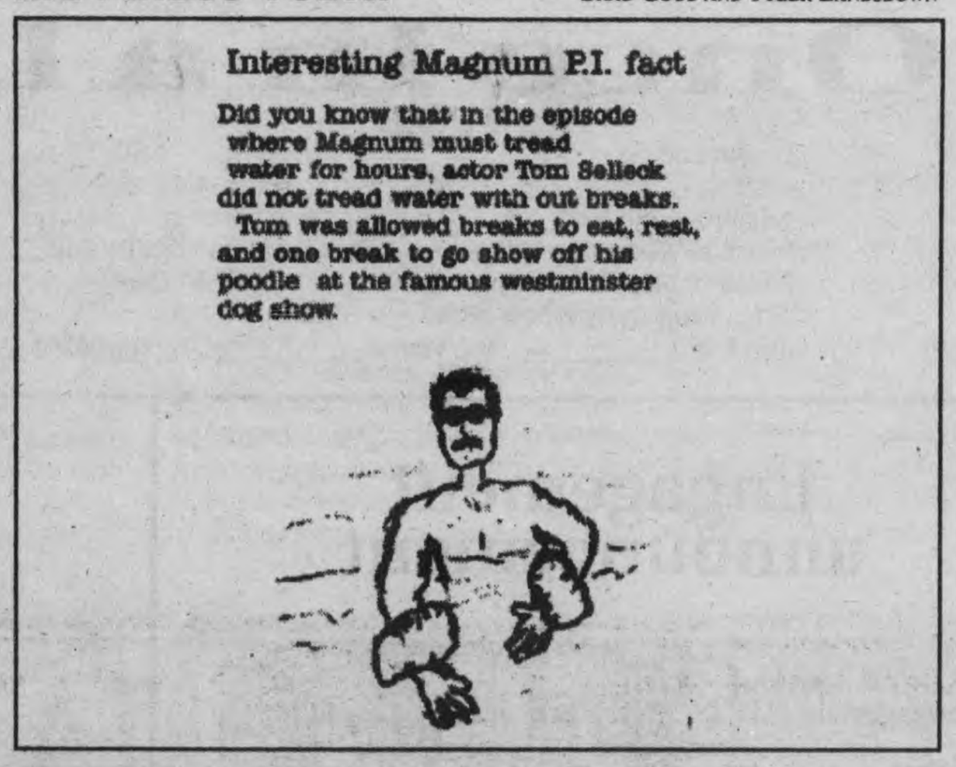
He said he hoped to get arrested to illustrate his point about the artwork and even brought lawyer Gil Davis, former lawyer for presidential plaintiff Paula Jones, just in case.

But the U.S. Park Police met with Mawyer, confirmed he had a two-hour permit and quietly watched as a few curious spectators grimaced.

NEA officials say some of the artwork on display came before substantial reforms were made in the agency's funding procedures, and others were not supported by NEA money.

"These groups try to flush this misinformation into the press," Cherie Simon, an NEA spokeswoman, said. "They make these things up. Everybody is tired of it."

Mawyer admits his crusade to close the NEA faces an uphill climb despite the Republican takeover of Congress in 1995.



The House Appropriations Committee last week blocked a bid to kill the agency, voting 31-27 to give the arts agency $98 million for 1999, the same amount it received this year. Support for the agency is stronger in the Senate.

The Supreme Court ruled last week that the government may use decency standards as criteria for grants.

The harshest critic of Mawyer's art show was the stiff breeze that whipped around NEA headquarters and repeatedly sent the displays toppling face-down onto the sidewalk.

Schools can use salsa as veggie

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Remember the uproar when the Reagan administration tried to declare ketchup a vegetable for school lunches?

Well, ketchup might not have cut the mustard. But its cousin, salsa, has received the government's seal of approval.

Seventeen years after the ketchup flap, the Agriculture Department has decreed that school lunch programs can use salsa — a spicy sauce usually made with tomatoes, peppers and onions — in crafting a nutritionally balanced menu.

Even the nation's self-appointed food police approve of the action.

"It's tough enough to get kids to eat fruits and vegetables, so we're all in favor of looking for different ways to do that. And this certainly sounds like a sensible one," said David Schardt, an associate nutritionist with the Center for Science in the Public Interest, the Washington-based group known for its critiques of Chinese food and movie-theater popcorn.

Responding to requests from schools in the Southwest and West, the Agriculture Department has announced that school lunch programs can incorporate commercially made fruit and vegetable salsas into their menus. Before that ruling last week, schools had been allowed to use salsas made in their own kitchens.

"We think salsa is a great product and will help in the consumption of more nutritious meals," said Ed Cooney, deputy administrator of special nutrition programs at Agriculture's Food and Nutrition Service.

"It's part of our general trend toward enhancing the quality of nutrition education we provide," Cooney said Tuesday. "This is a lifelong experience for kids, learning how to eat properly."

School cafeterias have been dishing up salsa for a while, but it hasn't been considered a reimbursable item under the federal school lunch program, which paid out $4.9 billion to 94,000 schools last year.

USDA officials clearly are skittish about the inevitable comparisons between the salsa rule and the much-ridiculed ketchup debacle.

"Ketchup is really mostly sugar and vinegar," said one Agriculture Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity. "This is not the same because ... (salsa) is essentially a vegetable salad."

Schardt, the nutritionist, is happy about the change because salsa tends to be "less processed than boiled vegetables or fruit in thick syrup."

Inmates on work detail at Statehouse disciplined for drinking

TOPEKA — Three inmates have been disciplined for getting drunk while on a cleanup work detail at the Statehouse two weeks ago.

It is not known whether the inmates were supplied the liquor by someone who brought it into the Capitol, or they found it in a legislator's office, Corrections Secretary Chuck Simmons said.

Simmons said the inmates were tested and found to be legally drunk after they returned to the Topeka Correctional Facility on the city's east side.

The inmates, who had been cleaning legislators' offices, appeared to be intoxicated when they got back to TCF on June 16, he said.

The secretary said all inmates have been pulled from performing janitorial duties in the Capitol because of the incident, but they still are being used for work on the Statehouse grounds.

"We're not sure of the source of the alcohol," Simmons said. "It could have been brought in to them. But the fact is they came to be in possession of it, consumed it and that's what happened."

The unidentified inmates were given disciplinary reports for having used stimulants, Simmons said, and were sentenced to seven days in the maximum security unit at TCF, lost 10 days of good time and were fined $10 each.

They also had their inmate status changed to maximum custody and no longer are eligible for community work details.

It is against state law to consume alcoholic beverages on state property unless that property has been designated specifically by the Legislature to permit drinking — such as university reception buildings and the historic Dillon House across the street from the Capitol. The ban applies to the Capitol.

CD-ROM to make monument accessible

Scott Aldis-Wilson
Kansas State Collegian

It might soon be possible to travel to the Four Corners area of Utah, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico in a few minutes, all courtesy of the College of Education.

John Parmley, associate professor of secondary education, has been working in a partnership with the Hovenweep National Monument on an interactive CD-ROM to inform people about the area.

▶ More info?
Find more information about Hovenweep at www2.educ.ksu.edu/Projects/Hovenweep/HovenHome.html.

Hovenweep, skirting the southwest border of Colorado and southeast border of Utah, features native villages that were abandoned in the late 1200s, Parmley said. The inhabitants, referred to as the Anasazi or Ancestral Pueblo, were very much like the cliff-dwelling Pueblos of neighboring Mesa Verde National Park in some ways, he said.

Both groups were agrarian cultures of the Southwest that gave rise to the Hopi, Zuni and numerous Pueblo tribes, he said. Hovenweep, however, lacks Mesa Verde's canyons. The result, Parmley said, is towering stand-alone structures that baffle stone masons to this day.

The idea for the CD-ROM stemmed from a mix of the current trend in education and his own lifelong interest, Parmley said. When he came to K-State, Parmley said the education college was exploring applications of computer technology for teaching. As he and other faculty were looking for visually interesting images for a project geared towards middle school and high school students, pictures from Mesa Verde piqued interest from the group. Parmley, a native of Cortez, Colo., said he reestablished contacts in the area, and a partnership with Hovenweep was formed in February 1992.

The original idea was to put images on diskettes, Parmley said.

"We progressed from there to the compact disc concept, which will have music, natural sounds and still images. It's a much richer format," Parmley said.

Since they've started collecting audio and video footage, Parmley said he and teams have collected between 12 and 15 hours of video, six to eight hours of audio and 500 still images. Less than half of this information probably will make it to the finished CD-ROM, Parmley said.

"We have most everything we want, or we're at least saying 'Enough is enough,' and making maximum usage of what we have," he said.

Interviews with Hovenweep superintendent Art Hutchinson on the history of the area almost certainly will stay with the finished product, Parmley said.

"He has a way of bringing things to life that really needs to be done. We would probably take out a lot of things before we take out those interviews," Parmley said.

Parmley said he hopes to finish the CD-ROM either by late summer or early fall. Currently, information is being organized and loaded into parent software, he said.

> "I THINK PEOPLE WILL FIND IT BOTH INTERESTING AND PLEASING."
> JOHN PARMLEY
> associate professor secondary education

Parmley said most of the users likely will be visitors of the monument itself; however, groups in Scandinavia and Canada have shown interest, as well as schools in Washington D.C., Phoenix and Southern California, Parmley said. The intent is to make the CD-ROM available across the country, Parmley said.

"I think people will find it both interesting and pleasing. My hope is that they'll have some meaningful insight into a group I've long felt to be fascinating," Parmley said.

Extra material might go towards either later CD-ROMs or for the Web site the college has maintained for Hovenweep since 1995, Parmley said.

Todd Goodman, a K-State alumnus and purchasing agent for Hill and Company Inc., was part of the five-member team who traveled to collect footage in Hovenweep in 1995. Goodman said he did the work for free through his freelance company Paradox graphics because it had educational value, unlike his usual commercial jobs.

Goodman said the monument was easy to work in because of its isolation from traffic.

"It's not only an extremely quiet place, but you get a sense of peace. If I had to pick one word, it would be peaceful," Goodman said.

Scott Parmley, senior in music composition and son of John Parmley, wrote and performed music for the project. Although he said he had previous experience writing and performing music for K-State's CD-ROM projects on Mesa Verde and Badlands National Park, he did more than he ever had on the Hovenweep project. Scott Parmley said that in addition to the musical chores he also had a hand in gathering audio-visual material for the CD-ROM and the planning of it.

Scott Parmley said unlike previous projects where he used the synthesizer exclusively, the Native American woodflute was used.

"The woodflute is really the premier style of music you're going to hear. It's an instrument I admire," Scott Parmley said.

Scott Parmley said current plans for the CD-ROM might include a two-part package, one for the computer and one with 45 minutes of original music that would be compatible with audio CD players. He said he considers this work to be his best for any CD or project so far.

"I just hope that people enjoy it. It was designed to provide people with the virtual feel of Hovenweep," Scott Parmley said.

IRAQ

are going to continue to patrol, and anytime there is any kind of threatening act we will take decisive action to respond immediately," Gore said.

Nizar Hamdoon, Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, said the incident would not affect UN-Iraqi relations, which are still on course.

"The U.N. has nothing to do with this whole no-fly zone," Hamdoon said. "Iraq intends to keep up its cooperation with the U.N. as long as the process of the lifting of the sanctions is moving."

The incident occurred about 1:30 a.m. EDT, daylight hours in Iraq.

Cohen said the U.S. aircraft fired because it was armed with HARM air-to-ground missiles and had the role of protecting the British aircraft during their patrol mission.

"We hope this will be seen as an isolated example and not be seen as any escalation" on the part of Iraq, the secretary said.

Although eight hours had elapsed since the firing, Cohen said there didn't appear to be any need to disturb the president any earlier.

"If it had been more serious, then obviously this information would have been communicated right away, but a determination was made that it was isolated in nature, and it was left at that," Cohen said.

In November 1996, two U.S. F-16 pilots fired missiles at Iraqi radar sites near the 32nd parallel in the southern no-fly zone. That incident occurred one month after Iraqi President Saddam Hussein moved his troops into northern Iraq and U.S. ships and airplanes fired scores of cruise missiles at Iraqi antimissile sites.

Just last month, Clinton ordered the number of U.S. forces in the Gulf cut from nearly 37,000 to around 20,000. On June 4, the Air Force announced it was pulling its F-117 stealth fighter-bombers out of the Gulf area.

GRAND JURY

for help in getting a job.

Starr's office used Tripp's cooperation to expand the Whitewater investigation to determine whether Clinton and Lewinsky lied under oath in the Jones lawsuit when they denied a sexual relationship. They also are investigating whether other presidential friends, including Vernon Jordan, tried to obstruct justice or tamper with witnesses. Clinton and Jordan deny wrongdoing.

With Clinton refusing to volunteer testimony and Lewinsky unable to reach agreement with prosecutors for her cooperation, Tripp's appearance marked a pivotal moment for the 23 grand jurors who must decide whether any criminal charges are warranted.

At the White House, presidential aides kept a watchful eye but steered away from any attacks on Tripp, banking on public polls showing uneasiness about her secret tapings and motives.

If Tripp's appearance wasn't enough of a reminder of the perils still facing Clinton, one of Lewinsky's lawyers appeared at the same courthouse Tuesday for an unrelated case, but gave an upbeat assessment of the chances of reaching a deal for immunity in exchange for her cooperation.

"Give us a month," attorney Nathaniel Speights said. Asked how the negotiations were going, the lawyer said, "We're working away. Everything is OK."

Tripp once worked in the Clinton White House and peddled an unsuccessful book idea about her experiences there. She first came to Whitewater prosecutors' attention early in their investigation of Vincent Foster's death. She was one of the last in the White House to see him alive.

She later transferred to the Pentagon, where in 1996 she befriended Lewinsky, 24, and became so close that Lewinsky confided an alleged sexual relationship with the president to her.

MEDICAL NEWS

FDA approves melt-in-mouth migraine drug

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The government approved a new type of migraine relief Tuesday: a mint-flavored tablet that literally melts on the tongue in seconds.

Patients don't swallow Merck & Co.'s Maxalt-MLT like a typical pill. Made with a new technology that freeze-dries the medicine, Maxalt-MLT dissolves upon contact with the tongue — no water needed.

There are numerous other migraine medicines. But Merck said swallowing pills can be difficult for some patients who also experience nausea. Migraine drugs also come in injection and nasal-spray forms.

The Food and Drug Administration approved the drug, known chemically as rizatriptan, for adults based on studies that found it relieved pain for about 66 percent of patients within two hours.

The prescription-only drug will be available within a few weeks, Merck said. It is expected to cost about $14 a pill.

PETS AT WORK

Animals invade hi-tech workplaces

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Silicon Valley's workplaces are going to the dogs. Along with a few cats, birds, rodents and fish.

A growing number of high-tech companies are letting their employees bring their animals to work after discovering that making pet owners happy can be good business.

Employees no longer feel they have to make it home at a certain hour to care for Fido or Fluffy. And a pet-friendly workplace can help attract and keep good workers, many of whom care as much for their pets as parents do for their children.

Companies don't exactly let pets have the run of the workplace. They require that animals be confined to their owners' work spaces. Dogs must be leashed, licensed and have all their shots.

Personnel managers at Netscape Communications Corp., Excite! Inc. and Autodesk Inc. say they haven't received any complaints so far.

For Rafhael Cedeno, a software engineer, bringing his Yorkshire terrier to work is so important that he won't take a job where he can't.

"(He) would be upset if I didn't bring him to work," Cedeno said.

TEACHERS TESTED

Massachusetts education commissioner resigns amid test uproar

BOSTON — Massachusetts' education commissioner resigned amid an uproar that started when more than half of the state's aspiring teachers flunked a first-ever reading and writing test.

Commissioner Frank W. Haydu III accused Gov. Paul Cellucci of turning the literacy test into a political issue. Cellucci, a Republican, is running in the November election.

"Our teachers — because of the governor — are being tarred and feathered with being incompetent and illiterate," Haydu said Monday in announcing his resignation. "It's so inaccurate and unfair."

The resignation is effective Sept. 1.

Nearly 60 percent of the 2,000 prospective teachers failed the test. But the state Board of Education, with backing from Haydu, voted last week to lower the passing grade, reducing the number who failed to 44 percent.

Cellucci was outraged by the move and said the board will meet this week to reconsider the decision.

If the board reverses itself, the estimated 260 people who benefited from the lowered benchmark will have to retake the test.

"I'm not really concerned about the personnel fallout," Cellucci said. "What I am concerned about is seeing this through. I think the Board of Education made a mistake in lowering standards."

Haydu, a former board member and education commissioner since March, said he recommended the lower standard because the test had never been given before.

Until this spring, Massachusetts was one of only seven states that did not require teachers to pass a test to qualify for certification.

The Education Department released a sample of the exam, which Board of Education chairman John Silber said seemed to be at about an eighth-grade level.

The samples showed some test-takers, when trying to rewrite sentences, misspelled words a 9-year-old could spell, even though the words were right in front of them. Some wrote at a fifth- or sixth-grade level.

Cellucci said current teachers should be tested as well. He said there are "perhaps thousands of teachers who are in the classroom today who are not meeting the standards."

Fueling Up For Exercise

How you eat and drink in the half hour after exercise can have a major impact on your next workout. "Muscles absorb carbohydrates most effectively within the first 30 minutes following exercise," said David Brennan, an exercise physiologist at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston. "So it's important to begin taking in fluids, including sports beverages that are high in carbohydrates, almost immediately after exercise."

Fatigue is related to the gradual depletion of the body's carbohydrate (glycogen) stores. Resynthesis of muscle glycogen often takes at least 20 hours (sometimes more) to restore glycogen to pre-exercise levels.

While fluids help you rehydrate, solid foods that are rich in carbohydrates are also necessary to help speed muscle recovery. "Beans, pasta and breads are excellent sources of complex carbohydrates and perfect for refueling after a workout," said Brennan.

INDEPENDENCE

Various celebrations to occur in city, area

Several local festivities are planned for this year's Fourth of July holiday, most of which are free.

The Westside Business Association will be presenting the fifth-annual Thunder Over Manhattan celebration beginning at 5 p.m. Saturday in CiCo Park.

Events include free swimming, horse rides, fire-truck rides, a Sunset Zoological Park program, military displays and face painting, said Alan Parker, one of the owners of Borck Brothers Fine Menswear.

Saturday's festivities will be provided free as a community service from Westside businesses.

KMKF-FM 101.5 will broadcast live from the park, and the Manhattan Municipal Band will perform from 7 to 8:30 p.m., Parker said.

There also will be a five-kilometer road race and a two-mile fun walk at 7:30 p.m. with prizes given. Registration begins at 5:30 p.m.

At 9:30 p.m., a fireworks display will begin, he said.

Parker said Thunder Over Manhattan is a great family outing with many activities for kids.

There are many more things to do at the celebration this year than in the past, he said.

"We're hoping to get more people out earlier this year," he said.

Lawn chairs and blankets may be brought into the park, but no alcohol is allowed, he said.

Abortion restriction law goes into effect

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas now has a more restrictive late-term abortion law, despite Wichita physician George Tiller's effort to get the state Supreme Court to block its implementation.

His clinic, meanwhile, was updating its computer Internet site to reflect changes brought about by the new law. The clinic also was figuring ways to work within the statute, which took effect Wednesday.

"Our intention is to follow the law. We are going to continue to provide abortions as we can. We are relying on our attorneys to provide us with counsel about what we can and can't do," said Dena Vogler, administrator of the Women's Health Care Services.

The law prohibits abortions of viable fetuses after 22 weeks' gestation, including those with severe, life-threatening abnormalities and deformities.

The procedure is allowed if two physicians agree the procedure is needed to save a woman's life or that continuing the pregnancy would cause "a substantial and irreversible impairment of a major bodily function."

Tiller has said the law will force women to give birth to children with severe abnormalities.

Last month, Tiller filed a lawsuit with the Supreme Court challenging the law's constitutionality and asked the court to issue an injunction until it could rule on the matter.

However, Wednesday arrived and the justices took no action to block the new law.

They also remained silent on whether they will take the case, dismiss it or send it to a district court for hearing. Normally the court hears cases only on appeal.

Vogler said Tiller was disappointed the court allowed the law to go into effect, but said there are no plans to close the clinic.

Although the clinic specializes in late-term abortions, Vogler said most of the 3,000 procedures the clinic performs each year are before the 22nd week of gestation.

"We are still looking at the law in its entirety to analyze what services we can provide. This is day one of the new law," Vogler said.

Tiller argued in his lawsuit that the law is too vague, violates the privilege against self-incrimination and restricts a woman's liberty.

When Gov. Bill Graves signed the legislation into law, it touched a firestorm over what it was supposed to do — and not do.

Some insisted the law allows late-term abortions to prevent damage to a woman's mental health. Anti-abortion activists and legislators said the exception is not included.

Graves said the exception is included and that he believes it is necessary to make the law constitutional.

The law also requires physicians performing abortions after the 22nd week of pregnancy to file a report with the Department of Health Environment spelling out the reasons it was necessary.

It also makes Kansas the 27th state to ban a late-term procedure known as partial-birth abortion.

The lawsuit, however, doesn't challenge that portion of the law.

The procedure involves partially extracting a fetus, legs first; cutting an incision in the barely visible skull base; then draining the contents of the skull so it will fit through the birth canal.

Judge rebukes Starr's tactics, throws out tax evasion case

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Sharply rebuking Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr's tactics, a federal judge Wednesday dismissed a tax evasion case against presidential friend Webster Hubbell, declaring the charges were tainted by "a quintessential fishing expedition."

Starr vowed an immediate appeal, while a relieved Hubbell expressed his gratitude to the judge.

"We're just very, very grateful. ... We didn't expect anything this quick," Hubbell said after the charges against him, his wife Suzy and two friends were dropped just five days after the court heard arguments.

U.S. District Judge James Robertson ruled Starr had not gotten proper permission to expand his probe and had trampled on Hubbell's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination by using business documents turned over under an immunity grant as the basis for the prosecution.

Robertson also faulted Starr for failing to get Attorney General Janet Reno's permission to expand his investigation against Hubbell, and producing an indictment that had "nothing in common" with his original mandate to look at land deals in Arkansas.

The ruling was the latest in a series of legal setbacks for the prosecutor.

The Supreme Court refused to hear two of his legal matters in the Monica Lewinsky probe on an emergency, fast-track basis and also rejected his efforts to get notes from the lawyer for the late Vincent Foster.

Hubbell resigned in March 1994 as the No. 3 Justice Department official under a cloud of allegations he had defrauded the Arkansas law firm where he and Hillary Clinton had served as partners.

In December 1994, he pleaded guilty to tax evasion and mail fraud and promised to cooperate with Starr's investigation of the Clintons' Arkansas business dealings.

But Hubbell frustrated prosecutors by failing to recall many key matters under investigation, and they indicted him April 30 on the tax charges.

Businesses prepare for holiday weekend

Scott Aldis-Wilson
Kansas State Collegian

Groups all over Manhattan have been working to get the most explosive of holiday supplies ready for sale as the Fourth of July gets closer.

Steve Burnett, assistant director of technical services for the Manhattan Fire Department, said only fireworks containing less than 50 milligrams of powder can be sold at fireworks stands.

Manhattan laws also ban bottle rockets. The wording of the law has been revised over time to include any self-propelled fireworks consisting of a tube and an attached guiding stick or rod, Burnett said.

Independence Day 4

Fireworks may be sold legally from noon of July 1 to midnight of July 4, Burnett said. The legal period to discharge fireworks on private property runs from 8 a.m. on July 1 to midnight of July 4. Setting off fireworks on public property including parks, streets and buildings is always prohibited, he said.

Many of the booths selling firecrackers this year aren't doing it for personal profit but as group fund-raisers. Dave Parker and other volunteers set up their tent Tuesday near Wal-Mart to raise money for Manhattan Catholic Schools. The tent, as well as the fireworks in it, were provided by Freedom Fireworks, and profits are divided between the company and the group, Parker said.

Although tastes vary among customers, anything that goes up in the air and pops remains popular every year, Parker said.

After figuring in packages or buy-one-get-one-free deals, Parker said prices from one stand to the next usually come very close to the same. As a result, some clientele will choose a stand not only because of its selection or location but on what group it supports, Parker said.

Manhattan Jaycees Chairman Charlene Gibson said its tent, in conjunction with Wholesale Fireworks in the parking lot of Dillons, 130 Sarber Lane, usually does its best sales in artillery shells, rockets and novelty items such as tanks that "people buy to see what the heck it does."

Both Parker and Gibson said their busiest day will be July 3, and the biggest sales will be the next day to clear inventory.

One merchant who is taking his own approach to the sales of fireworks is Walt Pesaresi, owner and operator of Mr. P's Party Outlet. Pesaresi said he plans to sell fireworks for the first time through his store. This makes him the only merchant in town selling through a permanent building.

"I guess we may be the only air-conditioned fireworks stand in town," Pesaresi said.

Selling them in his store makes more of a challenge for recognition against the tents, Pesaresi said.

"One of the things they've got going for them is you see a tent as you drive by, you know what it's there for. We've got to break stereotype," Pesaresi said.

Burnett said it is important for people to exercise basic safety. Never light and hold fireworks, never light and throw them, and never place lit fireworks in any sort of a container. Burnett said recent years have been safe ones.

"We've been fairly lucky the past couple of years or people have been doing what they should," Burnett said.

Pesaresi said to light in only one area with one person lighting at a time. He also said people should move their cars away beforehand and keep a bucket of water or a fire extinguisher near.

Mike Ryan, another volunteer with Parker, said people also should be aware of powder residue on their hands before they wipe sweat from their eyes and end up with the stinging powder in them.

Ryan also said damp weather might cause fireworks not to go off immediately after being lit. Ryan said not to touch them for at least five to 10 minutes and then spray them with a hose or pour water on them.

FIREWORKS SAFETY AND INFO

4th of July

- You can buy fireworks from noon of July 1 to midnight of July 4.
- Fireworks can be discharged on private property from 8 a.m. on July 1 to midnight on July 4.
- Make sure children have adult supervision when lighting fireworks.
- Sparklers are hazardous types of fireworks. They are almost hot enough to melt gold, and could burn your child's skin easily.
- Try to find a large, flat surface away from homes or buildings to light fireworks.
- Never light fireworks inside or near dry grass, and always have water or a fire extinguisher nearby.
- Buy fireworks that are appropriate for the age of your child. Let younger children start out with "worms" and "smoke bombs."
- Nearly 10,000 fireworks related injuries are reported in the U.S. each year. Injury rates are going down, with more states outlawing certain types of fireworks.

Learning Channel cancels planned show for history of beer

NEW YORK — Anheuser-Busch was all set to televise an upbeat program about the history of beer on the Learning Channel. Then the head of the cable channel pulled the plug.

Johnathan Rodgers, the president of Discovery Networks, which oversees the Learning Channel, has decided not to air the 30-minute "An American History of Beer," The Wall Street Journal reported Wednesday. A company spokeswoman said he made the decision as soon as he learned the show was planned.

The beer history was created by Omnicom Group's DDB Needham, the advertising agency that also created the Budweiser frogs. It was to be aired without charge to the brewer, the Journal reported.

The show, which was scheduled to air July 11 and 12, would have opened with a message from Anheuser-Busch chairman and chief executive officer August Busch III. A Budweiser logo over a black-and-white photo of men posing next to barrels of beer also would have appeared.

Anheuser-Busch issued a statement saying it was in discussions with the Learning Channel to ensure that the show airs with a clear notice that it was produced and paid for by the St. Louis-based brewer.

Before the program was pulled, Steve Cheskin, the Learning Channel's vice president in charge of programming, told the paper that the show was good for both business and education.

"Clearly, Anheuser-Busch is a good advertiser and somebody we'd like to do business with," Cheskin said. "But we would not take this program unless we thought it was acceptable."

Wildfires destroy homes; evacuations ordered again

Associated Press

MIMS, Fla. — Wildfires burned several houses and a gas station Wednesday and closed a 30-mile stretch of Interstate 95, the major north-south highway along the East Coast.

Up to 3,000 people in and around the towns of Mims and Scottsmoor were again ordered to leave their homes after fires pushed around by shifting winds advanced on their property.

The residents had been ordered out Tuesday when flames came within 50 yards of some of their homes. They were allowed to return late Tuesday and early Wednesday before they were again told to flee.

One man was arrested and another sought when each used their vehicles to run over law enforcement officers who were trying to dissuade people from going back to their homes in burning Brevard County.

Up to 3,000 residents in Brevard County were ordered to leave their homes, some for a third time, as the fires threatened the rural landscape.

Michael Shimshack apparently was upset because he was delayed getting to his home to retrieve his boat. He was charged with attempted first-degree murder for allegedly running over a Brevard deputy sheriff with his sports-utility vehicle.

Shimshack barricaded himself in his home for 30 minutes but eventually gave up, authorities said. Hatten was taken to the hospital for an MRI after complaining of abdominal pains and numbness.

In a similar incident, a highway patrol officer was struck on U.S. 1. A suspect was identified but no arrest had been made, the sheriff's office said.

Mobile homes were burning in the Scottsmoor area, just inland from Cape Canaveral. A wildfire that jumped over U.S. 1 in the same area damaged a gas station and a Dairy Queen.

Roger Harless, who was forced to leave his home near Mims on Tuesday, was told to load up and get out again Wednesday as wildfires neared the 250-home wooded neighborhood.

"We haven't unloaded a thing," he said, referring to the last time his family packed. "We are ready to go and we will be going again, I imagine."

In Scottsmoor, George and Gail Haile quickly loaded a 15-foot truck and tried to decide which of their possessions to save.

"I think we are going to have a barbecue," Haile said. "We got wiped out in Hurricane Andrew, and now we're going to get burned out."

More than 1,700 fires have exploded across the state since Memorial Day, destroying more than 250,000 acres.

To the north in Volusia County, fire marshals arrested two youngsters, age 8 and 9, for allegedly setting fire Tuesday afternoon to a wooded area in their hometown of Deltona. The fire was quickly contained.

Diana memorial opens

Associated Press

GREAT BRINGTON, England — In a school report displayed behind glass, a math teacher had written, "I fear numbers mean little to Diana." Nearby stands a school trunk labeled D. Spencer and a pair of small, well-worn tap shoes — mementos of a little girl who grew up to be Princess Diana.

Nearly 2,500 people waited in line for more than an hour to see such relics Wednesday — the opening day of a $5 million memorial museum at Diana's ancestral home, Althorp House.

The opening came on what would have been Diana's 37th birthday.

For many visitors, the place to be on the estate was the small, ornamental lake where Diana lies buried on an island, a bucolic, tree-ringed spot. Mourners laid armfuls of Diana's favorite lilies and white roses at a small temple at one end of the lake, the nearest they could get to her grave site.

But some said they feared the world's most photographed woman, killed in an Aug. 31 car crash while fleeing the paparazzi in Paris, continues to be exploited.

"Even in death, she has not got peace," said Isabel Don, crying quietly as she surveyed the stream of passing visitors and helicopters overhead carrying TV crews. "People will always want more of her."

Demand was heavy for the limited number of tickets, called "invitations to visit." Soon after the gates opened at 10 a.m., lines began to form outside the early 18th-century former stable block where many of Diana's belongings are housed.

Charles, the ninth Earl Spencer, has been accused of trying to cash in on his sister's memory. He spent much of the day mingling with visitors, listening to endless stories about "the day I met Diana" and posing for photographs.

"I hope you find this appropriate," he said.

Many in the crowd were members of the press, who had to buy tickets through a telephone sales line like everyone else. Among them was Arthur Edwards, a photographer for Britain's Sun tabloid, who photographed Diana throughout her royal life.

"I miss her," Edwards said as he paused to study the giant stone urn the earl erected on the island. "She was so lively, so down to earth. I have photographed her on so many birthdays, and this year we are here. ... I still can't believe it."

Diana's sons planned no public appearances on her birthday, and it was unclear how they marked it. Prince William, 16, was on holiday from Eton College, and Prince Harry, 13, was still at Ludgrove School. Diana's former husband, Prince Charles, had a full schedule of official engagements, but made no public comments.

Earl Spencer also has opened Althorp House, with its collection of family portraits and valuable paintings, through Aug. 30.

Nearly 150,000 tickets have been sold at prices ranging from $8.50 for children to $13 for senior citizens and $16 for adults.

Man sues bar, claims dancer's breasts gave him whiplash

Associated Press

CLEARWATER, Fla. — A man is suing a topless club, claiming a dancer gave him whiplash during his 1996 bachelor party when she bumped him with her prodigious breasts.

"I saw stars," said Paul Shimkonis, a 38-year-old physical therapist. He said a dancer by the name of Tawny Peaks, with a 60-HH bust, apparently "jumped up and slammed her breasts into my head and just about knocked me out. It was like two cement blocks hit me."

Shimkonis said he hurt his neck and back and was still in pain nearly two years later. He is suing the Diamond Dolls club for more than $15,000.

"When I tell people how it happened, they just laugh. At work, I just don't tell them anymore," he said.

Vinny Radene, a club manager, said he didn't see the incident, but "if I was injured, I would just love it anyhow. I wouldn't try to complain about it."

And what did Shimkonis' bride think of the incident?

"My wife understood completely," he said. "She has a good sense of humor, thank goodness."

LIABILITY ISSUES

Dealership faces criminal charge in traffic death of woman

OLATHE, Kan. — An Independence, Mo., car dealership faces a criminal charge for allegedly not fixing the brakes on a delivery truck that slammed into a car and killed a woman.

It's the first time in Johnson County that a corporation has faced criminal charges for allegedly causing a homicide, District Attorney Paul Morrison said.

The vehicular-homicide charge, filed against Landmark Dodge Inc. Tuesday in Johnson County Court, is a misdemeanor, and the maximum punishment is a $2,500 fine.

"To us, this is a corporate responsibility issue," Morrison said.

On July 14, 1997, the brakes of a delivery truck allegedly failed, and the truck slammed into the back of a car on a busy road in Overland Park.

Margarita Contreras, a 21-year-old Mexican immigrant who was studying to become a licensed nurse, was fatally injured. Her parents live in Mexico, and she had been living in the Kansas City area for a few months before she was killed.

"We are alleging that this was a situation where the brakes were allowed to wear so badly they completely failed," Morrison said. Landmark Dodge "had been told and had reason to know that the brakes were bad and did nothing to fix them," he said.

The truck's driver was not charged.

The dealership referred questions to a lawyer who is representing it in a wrongful-death civil lawsuit the victim's parents have filed in Jackson County (Mo.) Court, but he could not be reached.

Olathe lawyer Dennis Moore said he is representing the dealership on the criminal charge. He said Tuesday that he had not seen the charge and couldn't comment.

Contreras was in a rear seat of a car driven by her sister. The car was stopped, waiting to make a left turn, when the 1990 Dodge Ram hit it.

An individual facing the same criminal charge could be fined and sentenced to a year in the county jail.

McVeigh wrote suicidal letters to sister

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Previously unreleased letters from Timothy McVeigh to his sister before the Oklahoma City bombing reveal a man so angry and alienated toward the government that he contemplated suicide, The New York Times reported Wednesday.

The letters led McVeigh's family to suspect him almost immediately in the April 19, 1995, bombing that killed 168 people.

The Times did not say how it obtained the letters and summaries of interviews conducted by investigators. The material was not presented at McVeigh's trial, which ended with his conviction and death sentence.

In one letter, dated Oct. 20, 1993, McVeigh told of going to his grandfather's house, where he considered killing himself because he had become disillusioned with the Army.

"I have an urgent need for someone in the family to understand me. I will tell you, and only you," he wrote to his sister, Jennifer.

Timothy McVeigh told Army officials he quit Special Forces training because he could not meet the physical demands. But he told his sister it was because he and other trainees were told they might have to take part in assassinations and CIA drug-trafficking.

The U.S. government has denied involvement in such acts.

Prosecutors argued at Timothy McVeigh's trial that the deadly federal raid on the Branch Davidian cult at Waco, Texas, motivated him to seek revenge.

McVeigh's family told investigators that his hatred of the government began before the April 19, 1993, raid but that the tragedy made him more angry.

In a letter dated Dec. 24, 1993, Timothy McVeigh called the Federal Reserve and banks the real criminals and asked: "Where is the crime in getting even? I guess if I reflect, it's sort of a Robin Hood thing, and our government is the evil king."

Jennifer McVeigh also said her brother was upset when the government informed him in February 1993 it had overpaid him by $1,058. That was two years after he had left the service, and he was asked to repay the money.

Responding to the government, Timothy McVeigh wrote: "In all honesty, I cannot even dream of repaying you the $1,000 which you say I owe. In fact, I can barely afford my monthly rent."

Jennifer McVeigh later told investigators that she had an eerie feeling that her brother was involved in the bombing.

Marines to face courts-martial

Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — A military judge has recommended the pilot and navigator of a low-flying Marine jet that cut a gondola cable in the Italian Alps — killing 20 people — face courts-martial for negligent homicide, a senior military official said Wednesday.

The military official, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press the two other aviators in the EA-6B Prowler were not recommended for courts-martial.

The recommendations by military judge Lt. Col. Ronald Rodgers, first reported by NBC, will be sent to Lt. Gen. Peter Pace, commanding general of Marine Atlantic forces in Norfolk, Va., who will decide whether to order courts-martial or not.

"He doesn't have to take it, but he probably will," the source said of the recommendations.

Marine Corps spokesmen at Camp Lejeune and the Pentagon said Rodgers' recommendations will be released to attorneys today.

Last month, Rodgers had a hearing for the pilot, Capt. Richard Ashby, 30, of Mission Viejo, Calif., and the navigator, Capt. Joseph P. Schweitzer, 30, of Westbury, N.Y., to determine whether they should face courts-martial.

In May, the judge had hearings for the jet's backseat crew — Capt. William L. Raney, 26, of Englewood, Colo., and Capt. Chandler P. Seagraves, 28, of Nineveh, Ind.

Ashby told the AP on Wednesday he hadn't been informed formally of the recommendation, but had heard from other sources he faced a court-martial.

"It just amazes me, the recommendation," Ashby said in a telephone interview. "I'm pretty down, actually."

The Feb. 3 tragedy happened when the jet clipped the gondola cable, which was 370 feet above the ground, while the Marines were on a practice run out of the Aviano air base.

Each Marine is charged with 20 counts of involuntary manslaughter and 20 counts of negligent homicide, as well as charges of destruction of private and military property and dereliction of duty. If tried and convicted of the charges, each faces life in prison.

The four fliers have denied flying recklessly, the significant point of the government case against them.

The incident soured Italian-American relations, sparking protests at Aviano, calls to close U.S. bases throughout Italy and charges that American fliers routinely "hot-dog" in Italian airspace.

COLLISION INVESTIGATION

NTSB cites fatigue, lack of safety system in 1997 train crash

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Federal transportation safety regulators attributed the cause of a fatal Kansas train collision last year to the engineer and to Union Pacific's lack of a backup safety system.

The July 2, 1997, accident near Delia, Kan., killed the engineer, caused $5 million in damage and led to the evacuation of 1,500 residents.

The National Transportation Safety Board, which investigated the crash, met Tuesday to review and approve a final report on the case, which focused new attention on railroad safety.

The collision occurred after a slow-moving westbound Union Pacific train failed to stop at a red light near Rossville. The train moved from a siding onto the main track, crashing into the sixth car of a lengthy eastbound train, also run by Union Pacific.

Seventeen rail cars on the eastbound train were derailed. The engineer of the westbound train, Mike Brown, 46, of Lenexa, was killed. Two locomotives pulling Brown's train were destroyed and three of the train's rail cars were derailed.

NTSB investigators found no use of drugs or alcohol or any health problem to explain why Brown failed to stop. The train's brakes and the railroad's signaling equipment appeared to be working normally, investigators said.

Ordinarily, a conductor would be in the locomotive cab and could alert the engineer to any problem. But investigators found the conductor was not feeling well and had been in the restroom in the 20 minutes before the crash.

There was "compelling evidence that the engineer was not attentive to his duties ... and likely fell asleep," said Rick Narvell, NTSB's human performance investigator.

The crash occurred on Brown's first day back from vacation, which is significant because the nighttime run marked a big change in his work and sleep patterns, investigators said.

Union Pacific is the only large U.S. railroad that does not use electronic "alerters" to guarantee that crews stay awake while trains are moving, investigators said. But the accident has prompted the company to step up its safety efforts and to consider installing alerter devices on its locomotives.

RECOVERY AND TRAGEDY

After recovery from devastating injuries, woman dies in fall

ROSEMONT, Pa. — Eight years ago, Jody Lynn Sack lay in a coma after a car crash that split her skull in half, punctured a lung, broke her ribs and left her partially blind.

She recovered to row on the women's crew team at the University of Virginia, where she used tape-recorded books and graduated in 1995 with a degree in English. She also ran the Philadelphia Marathon.

Early Saturday, just before she was to have started an advertising job in New York City, Sack lost her footing at a barbecue on a Manhattan rooftop and fell four stories to her death, authorities said.

Guests at the party had to walk up a fire escape from the third floor to get to the roof. When the group decided to return to the apartment around midnight, the 25-year-old Sack "reached out to what she thought was the rail but stepped into the air," said her mother, Lois Sack.

After college graduation, Sack attended an advertising school in Atlanta, worked as a sportswriter for the Main Line Times and had an internship with Mad Dogs and Englishmen, a New York advertising agency.

"She came to live in New York and only had limited sight, so every day was a risk," Rob Lovett, Sack's roommate, said. "But she'd go running every day, and rarely did she come back without another scrape on her knees from tripping on cracks or falling, but she'd get up the next day and go out again. I never met anyone like her."

Her childhood friend Sabrina Walheim recalled Sack's heartiness and humor.

"She saw possibilities instead of problems," Walheim said. "She taught me how to be brave and defy the small aggravations in life, and my greatest regret is I won't have the opportunity to learn more from her."

Feds investigate failures in vehicles

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A federal safety agency is investigating 250 consumer complaints of failing headlights, taillights or parking lights on some Dodge Ram pickup trucks.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said Wednesday it was looking at the engineering of headlight circuits on 1994-95 Ram 1500, 2500 and 3500 pickups. More than 450,000 of the popular pickups are on the road.

Only 11 percent of the cases involved the failure of headlights, the report said. One pickup owner said his headlights failed without warning as he drove in fog, causing him to crash into a wall.

Five owners said they smelled smoke and found burning wires. Six reported the headlights failed as they towed a trailer.

Jodi Armstrong, a spokeswoman for Chrysler Corp., said the company has found that the headlight circuit was being overloaded in some Dodge Ram pickups with extra power requirements for accessories, such as trailers or snowplows.

"There is a warning in the owner's manual about this," she said.

NHTSA investigators also are looking into complaints that the parking brake is failing on some 1994-95 Ford Mustangs.

Nearly 130 people claimed the parking brakes failed and their sports cars rolled away, causing 67 crashes and three injuries.

The agency also has opened an inquiry into five complaints that driver-side air bags deployed inadvertently in 1994 Mitsubishi Mirage and Chrysler Eagle Summit cars.

U.S. urges African governments to reject invitation from Gadhafi

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Clinton administration is urging African governments to turn down an invitation from Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi to attend a ceremony next week honoring the birthday of the prophet Mohammed.

Gadhafi sent out invitations to Muslim leaders throughout Africa for the July 6 event in an apparent attempt to test international resolve in enforcing a U.N. travel ban against Libya.

The invitations were issued after the Organization of African Unity expressed disapproval of the travel ban at its summit meeting in Burkina Faso three weeks ago.

U.S. officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Wednesday that African nations were told at the time in the strongest possible terms that the U.N. sanctions remain in place and that all nations were expected to adhere to them. Britain and France have been offering similar advice to the Africans.

The officials had no information on how many African leaders plan to attend the event Monday in Tripoli.

The sanctions were imposed after Libya refused to extradite two suspects in the 1988 bombing of a Pan-Am Boeing 747 over Lockerbie, Scotland, that killed 270 people. France holds Libya responsible for the deaths of 170 people who were killed in the bombing of a French UTA flight over Niger in 1989.

Chicotillas

5 K-Staters develop award-winning snack

Lynette Abitz
Kansas State Collegian

Five K-State students spent the last year developing Chicotillas. The bite-sized, low-fat snack has a crispy shell with a hot, spicy, tangy, sweet raisin filling, said Indira Reddy, graduate student in grain science and industry.

Reddy is a member of a team of students who returned from Atlanta, Ga., last week with a third-place finish in the 1998 Institute of Food Technologists Student Association Product Development Competition. Reddy said the team wanted to develop a flavor that wasn't available in the market.

"One of the biggest challenges of the food industry is coming up with new products," said Fadi Aramouni, associate professor of food science in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry and team adviser.

The team received $250 from M&M/Mars, sponsor of the competition. K-State has competed in the competition for the last three years and received third place each time.

Twenty schools competed in the competition. K-State was one of six teams to enter the finals. In the finals, K-State competed with Cornell University, Rutgers University, Iowa State University, University of Wisconsin and University of British Columbia.

Aramouni said the competition promoted the knowledge and experience gained by developing a product.

"The whole process of developing products has technical and marketing aspects," he said.

Aramouni said past team members from K-State have received good jobs based on their experience.

Reddy said the competition helped students understand the process of product development and gave them experience of working on a team. The beginning stages consisted of screening the market through tours of grocery stores. The team then brainstormed on what it wanted to make.

Students learned about various areas of product development. Mariano Loza, graduate student in grain science and industry, said much of the work went into the original proposal for the preliminary round.

A proposal was made to explain the product, its market value, cost analysis and advantages of the product. A report then was made to provide a description of the product, production, marketing analysis, economic feasibility, quality issues and a consumer test.

The team also prepared a 10-minute presentation for the final round. This presentation included making the product before the judges.

Loza said the competition served as a great learning experience.

FIVE K-STATE STUDENTS (CLOCKWISE FROM MIDDLE FRONT) INDIRA REDDY, BRINDA GOVINDARAJAN, MARIANO LOZA, GRADUATE STUDENTS IN GRAIN SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY, EMAD YASEEN, AND KHALED KHATIB, GRADUATE STUDENTS IN FOOD SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY, PLACED THIRD AS A TEAM IN THE 1998 INSTITUTE OF FOOD TECHNOLOGISTS STUDENT ASSOCIATION PRODUCT DEVELOPMENT COMPETITION.

"I learned to work with other people," he said. "Everybody else was busy, and this was another duty for all of us to make time for."

Brinda Govindarajan, graduate student in grain science and industry, said the experience also taught her how to work with a team and be patient with one another. She said it also gave them real-life practical experience.

The team competed with schools that had more resources than K-State. Govindarajan said it was exciting to receive third place out of the pool of schools.

"At the end, we were happy," she said. "We competed against big schools, and we were able to hold the banner high for K-State."

"They really made us proud," Aramouni said.

Other team members were Khaled Khati and Emad Yaseen, both graduate students in food science.

KAUFFMAN DEATH

Kansas City Royals board member dies

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Larry A. Kauffman, son of late Kansas City Royals owner Ewing M. Kauffman, died Wednesday. He was 51.

The Royals said Kauffman died at his Kansas City home Wednesday morning.

He was a member of the Board of Directors of the Royals.

The team is in the midst of auctioning itself off. It hasn't had a permanent owner since 1993, when Ewing M. Kauffman died.

"It's not necessary to have the vacancy on the board filled for the sale process to move forward," said Dean Davison, spokesman for the Royals board.

Kauffman also owned an operated the K & E Baseball Academy in South Kansas City. The academy offers young people instruction in baseball and softball.

ALCOHOL ADS

Children need to be skeptical of alcohol ads, researcher says

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Dancing beer cans and frogs can attract children to alcoholic beverages, but parents can temper that appeal by teaching children to be skeptical of such advertisements, a researcher said.

"The media is like a stranger we invite into our home," said Erica Weintraub Austin, an associate professor at Washington State University. "It doesn't always behave well."

"As parents, we get there first," she said. "Is it reasonable to blame the media?"

Austin spoke Tuesday during a conference sponsored by the Partnership of Media Education, a collaboration of the American Academy of Pediatrics, the Center for Media Literacy, the Center for Substance Use Prevention and the Media Literacy Project at Clark University.

The conference drew 450 educators, doctors, media producers and public health experts from 41 states and six countries.

Conference organizers said media literacy education is included in public school curriculums in 15 states, up from two states three years ago. Colorado does not have that type of program.

Austin said the programs are essential because the news media's role is expanding.

"If you're not using the media, someone else is and they're using it on you," she said.

WAR AGAINST AIDS

HIV/AIDS drugs might cause fat growths and high cholesterol

GENEVA — Drugs that have contributed to a dramatic decline in AIDS death rates could be causing diabetes and abnormalities such as "buffalo humps," strange fat growths around the shoulders and neck.

The treatments, called protease inhibitors, also have been associated with increased triglyceride and cholesterol levels, which can lead to greater risk of heart disease, specialists said Tuesday at the 12th World Aids Conference in Geneva.

In some cases, women treated with the drugs, which stop HIV from multiplying, have experienced breast growth, while other patients have reported enlargement of the abdomen, the researchers said.

David Cooper, an Australian expert in HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, said at the conference that the new findings deserved serious attention but that more evidence linking the drugs to the possible side effects was needed.

Experts must look at whether and how fast patients recovered from abnormalities after ceasing treatment with inhibitors, he said.

Scientists now consider that the benefits of the drug treatment outweigh their disadvantages, Cooper said.

Nineteen out of 118 women treated with one of the drugs complained about changes in their bodies, according to a study by Krista Dong of the Miriam Hospital and Brown University, both in Providence, R.I.

Nearly 71 percent of the women in the study are reported to have said their breasts had gotten bigger, a further 71 percent complained of an enlarged abdomen, 47 percent said their limbs had wasted and 23 percent said they were experiencing a "buffalo hump," abnormal fat in the neck and shoulders.

In another study of 110 HIV-positive patients at the Civic Hospital in Lugano, Switzerland, researcher Enos Bernasconi and others said they had observed higher cholesterol levels in patients treated with inhibitors against those who received other forms of treatment.

Research carried out by Ravi K. Walli and colleagues at the University of Munich in Germany showed use of inhibitors in therapy is linked with the occurrence of irreversible hyperglycemia and manifest diabetes mellitus.

Rifle buyers must pass instant background check

Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Deer hunters and other sportsmen will have to pass an instant background check before they can buy a rifle or shotgun under a change in a federal gun law that takes effect Dec. 1.

The background check, done on the spot in the gun store, will be the first national screening of hunters, target shooters and others buying long-barreled guns and will be the same as the instant checks now done in many states on would-be handgun purchasers.

Buyers of "long guns" were exempt from the Brady Act's requirement of a background check and five-day waiting period for handgun purchases when it passed in late 1993 and took effect in early 1994.

But that compromise legislation also looked ahead five years to a day when an instant, national computerized background check system would be in place, eliminating the need for the five-day waiting period and allowing the expansion of background checks to all gun purchases from registered dealers. That day is Dec. 1.

"There are going to be a few million mighty surprised hunters come Dec. 1," said John Velleco, spokesman for Gun Owners of America, a lobbying group opposed to gun control.

Until now, there was no comprehensive check on whether long gun buyers were telling the truth on federal firearms forms. The forms ask buyers whether they are felons or other groups barred by law from owning guns.

Handgun Control and the National Rifle Association, which rarely agree, do agree that the inclusion of long guns drew little notice when Congress passed the Brady law and even less since then.

The issue is tricky for the NRA, which helped engineer the switch from a waiting period to the instant check system when the Brady bill was before Congress. The NRA regards the instant check as less onerous, since the vast majority of buyers will be able to walk out of the store with their guns instead of returning to pick them up later.

The instant background check system will scan criminal and mental health records, military discharge rosters and other databases to see whether a customer may buy a gun legally. The system will not reveal why a customer has been rejected.

If it rejects a would-be buyer, it will put a hold on the sale, giving the store and customer three days to assess the problem. If the computer then rejects the buyer again, there is an appeal process.

Brady background checks blocked sales of some 69,000 handguns in 1997, more than half because the prospective buyer was a convicted felon or was under a felony indictment, the Justice Department said.

Long guns are used in relatively few crimes, despite the notoriety of recent schoolyard rifle shootings.

Aggieville business to change name with help of customers

PINK TACO TO CHOOSE NEW NAME AFTER PUBLIC OBJECTS TO MEANING.

Mary Bosco
Kansas State Collegian

After numerous complaints of its name offending others, the newest addition to Aggieville, the Pink Taco, has decided to make a change.

Owner James Sperman said the bar/restaurant is encouraging suggestions from the public to help it create a new name.

"It makes us feel bad that people are offended. We didn't intend to offend anyone," Sperman said. "Nobody enjoys making other people feel bad."

Sperman said people can either call, mail or drop off their suggestions within the next two weeks.

A $50 gift certificate to the restaurant will be awarded to the winning name.

"I would prefer that people drop them off, because then they could come by and see what swell guys we really are," Sperman said.

Sperman said he doesn't expect changing the name will increase business, he said he is more concerned with satisfying the community.

> "I'M GLAD THEY ARE CHANGING THEIR NAME BECAUSE OF HOW OTHERS TOOK IT AND HOW IT OFFENDED A LOT OF PEOPLE."
> KIM WILLINGHAM
> senior in secondary education

Along with the name change, it will no longer be selling tacos with pink shells.

However, it is considering dying them K-State purple, he said.

Sperman said business is good because it has the cheapest everyday beer prices in town.

"It's enough to survive, but not good enough to retire, yet," he said. "We definitely have some regulars, and on Friday nights when we've had a band, the patio and inside were full."

Joe Ashley, senior in mass communications, said he was appalled when he learned what the business' name means to some people.

"Changing their name will lend them their credibility. I might go there now," Ashley said. "I am going to go to a place for a good time and if I know it is quality, not just because of their cheap beer."

Kim Willingham, senior in secondary education, said she went to the Pink Taco one night and had a really good time sitting out on the patio watching people walk by the bar. However, she said she also is in favor of the change.

"I'm glad they are changing the name because of how others took it and how it offended a lot of people," Willingham said.
